Federation Votes to Take Gas Rate Rise Into Court

Citizens Also Urge Closing of Bolling And Anacostia Bases; Want Sesqui on Time

By Sy Fishbein
Post Reporter

The Federation of Citizens Associations last night decided to take its fight against a gas rate increase to District Court.

Denied a petition on December 14 by the Public Utilities Commission to reconsider its decision to increase gas rates by 6 percent, the Federation voted 64-29 to take the matter to court.

In other resolutions, passed in the District Building Board room, the Federation:

1. Strongly urged the abolition of Bolling Air Force Base and Anacostia Naval Air Station as military bases.

2. Asked that the advisory group representing organized citizenry be allowed to take part in planning the Sesquicentennial celebration; and that the celebration be started this year.

3. Asked for inclusion of a request for a new bridge across the Anacostia River north of Sousa Bridge in the 1951 budget because of increasing population in that part of Southeast Washington.

4. Voted to opposed a Senate bill to empower the Public Utilities Commission to limit the number of taxicab licenses because the powers granted to the Commission in the bill were considered too broad.

Opposition Raised

Submitted by the public utilities committee, the resolution to go to court encountered heavy opposition and involved parliamentary tactics.

The original measure authorized the committee chairman, Vernon V. Baker, to enter a civil action on behalf of the federation, to employ counsel without cost to the federation, and guaranteed to pay Baker any costs assessed by the lower court.

After an amendment to cut out the guarantee, which Baker called an attempt to defeat the resolution, was beaten, the Federation agreed to restrict its guarantee to not more than $25.

A strong opponent of the resolution, John Connaughton, former president of the federation, argued that a suit might involve the federation in heavy expenses should it go to an appeals court.

Federation Committed

Baker and his backers insisted that the resolution committed the federation to action in the lower courts only where expenses appeared to be nominal.

The public utilities committee, they said, felt certain that if the federation won in District Court

Saar Referendum Asked by Official Of West Germany

Bonn, Germany, Jan. 7 (AP).—West Germany's minister for external affairs, Jacob Kaiser, called tonight for a referendum to determine the political future of the Saar.

He told a Christian Democratic Party rally that any other solution would endanger the great task of European unity.

"It is unthinkable," he added, "that some people will try again to confront Germany with a fait accompli (accomplished act) on the Saar."

Detachment of the coal-rich Saar from Germany has been a long-standing French policy. Hitler achieved one of his first victories when, between the two World Wars, the Saarlanders voted overwhelmingly to return to Germany. Since World War II the Saar has been gradually incorporated into the French economy. Chancellor Konrad Adenauer is said to believe that ultimately the Saar will be politically German.

To Tag the Tygoons

Anti-Racket Drive Is Planned For Law Parley Called Here

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporter

The first national drive to tag the tygoons—the gambling racketeers who control organized crime in this second half of the twentieth century—will get under way in Washington next month.

Called by Attorney General J. Howard McGrath, a crime conference, beginning February 16, will bring together behind closed Justice Department doors top-ranking State and municipal officials. United States attorneys, gathered here from all over the Nation for their annual meeting, also will be present.

Together they will map ways and means of combatting the slot machine, numbers, horse race bookmaking and allied rackets now operating on a national scale for an annual "take" from the public running into the hundreds of millions of dollars.

McGrath, in calling the conference, recalled that a similar gathering in 1934 helped to bring about the Federal antikidnaping (Lindbergh) law and the unlawful flight

T-H Law Use In Coal Fight Urged by Taft

Decision Is Expected From NLRB Soon on Plan to Ask Injunction

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

The time has come for President Truman to come to the aid of his country by applying the Taft-Hartley Act against John L. Lewis, Senator Robert A. Taft (R., Ohio) declared yesterday.

The Republican policy chief told reporters yesterday the United Mine Workers' self-imposed three-day work week constituted "a serious threat to national health and safety" in view of dwindling coal supplies over the country.

The Ohioan, who is coauthor of the Taft-Hartley Management-Labor Relations Act, urged the President to invoke the injunction provisions of the law in a move to increase production of coal. By declaring a "national emergency," the President could establish an 80-day "cooling off" period in the contract dispute between John L. Lewis and the operators. During this period the 480,000 UMW miners could, presumably, be forced to put in a five-day work week.

If the President got the injunction, Senator Taft told newsmen, Congress could consider legislation to deal with John L. Lewis' newest economic weapon — the three-day work week.

During various periods since July 1, when the old contract ran out, Lewis has limited the work of his miners to three days a week, partly in a move to share the work, partly in a move to decrease above-ground stockpiles, and more recently, in a move to force operators to sign an "improved" contract.

The operators—except for a tiny minority—have resisted the UMW demands, and have charged Lewis and the union under the Taft-Hartley Act with unfair practices. The National Labor Relations Board is investigating the charges, and should they be found to have merit, NLRB General Counsel Robert Denham may seek an injunction sometime next week.

The operators hope to get a five-

Dog in Tennessee Walks 800 Miles, Finds His Master

Irwin, Pa., Jan. 7 (U.P.).—Bozo, a 3-year-old dog of scrambled ancestry, returned home today after an 800-mile walk from Oak Ridge, Tenn.

The family of Lawrence Leach left Bozo at Oak Ridge in September. Today, Mrs. Leach looked out of the window of their trailer home. There was Bozo. Three-year-old Larry Leach, the dog's master, ran out the door and Bozo wagged his tail and whined for joy.

GOP Senators Would Slash Aid to Britain

Recognition of Chinese Reds Seen as Break For ECA Opponents

By Homer Bigart
NYHT News Service

Senate Republicans predicted drastic cuts in foreign aid funds in retaliation for British recognition of Communist China yesterday as the Nation awaited an important address by Secretary of State Dean Acheson on positive measures to check Soviet domination of Asia.

Senate Republican Leader Kenneth S. Wherry (Nebr.), a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee, said he was confident the committee would scan Marshall Plan funds "item by item in view of the British action."

London's decision, he said, "affords even more compelling reasons for cutting this spending to support British socialism."

Senator Robert A. Taft (R., Ohio) said he thought the British move would "provide a lot of ammunition to those who want ECA funds cut" and Senator Homer E. Ferguson (R., Mich.) said the United States would now have to review

State Department Seeks Congress 'Tourist's' Views

The State Department has initiated a new program to get the foreign policy views of members of Congress who traveled abroad during the congressional recess, it was learned last night.

Department officials revealed that each member of the House and Senate who toured overseas will be asked to sit down and talk with State Department policy makers within the next month.

Wind Bowls Over Some of Mummers As 9000 Parade

Philadelphia, Jan. 7 (U.P.).—Some 9000 mummers disregarded stiff winds that whipped bright costumes and chilled blanketed spectators today as they cavorted up Broad st. in Philadelphia's annual splurge of unbridled merriment.

Gusts slowed the marchers and flapped 300-foot capes. Wind bowled over some of the heavily costumed paraders when it hit their tall headdresses.

But a bright sun added glitter to the Golden Jubilee New Year's mummers' parade, postponed from Monday because of threatening weather.

Dozens of string bands played the traditional songs of mummery. Clowns, dancers, floats and comics vied for the $40,000 in prizes put up by the city in the annual salute to King Momus, the mocking god who personified ridicule.

'Interference' Assailed

Hungary Says U. S. Closing Of Consulates Violates Pact

Budapest, Jan. 7 (AP).—Hungary's Communist government tonight declared the American order to close its consulates in New York and Cleveland is a treaty-violation and intolerable interference in Hungarian affairs.

The U. S. State Department issued the order January 3 in reprisal for Hungary's treatment of two Americans, Robert A. Vogeler of New York and Israel Jacobson of Chicago. The consulates were directed to shut by midnight next Sunday.

Hungary charged the order was a violation of the 1926 commercial and consular treaty between the United States and Hungary. The United States made the same charge against Hungary in its January 3 note.

The Hungarian Government thinks it necessary to emphasize once more," the reply concluded, "that it desires the improvement of relations between the United States and Hungary, but no threat nor menace with reprisal can alter its firm standpoint that, as in the past, it will not tolerate in the future any foreign interference with its internal affairs."

Vogeler, Eastern European representative of the International Telephone & Telegraph Corp., has been held in jail incommunicado on charges of espionage and sabotage since November 18.

Jacobson was director of Hungarian affairs of the American Joint Distribution Committee, a Jewish relief agency. Hungarian police held him for nearly two weeks in December and then expelled him, concluding he was "not quite a spy."

Permanent Law Sought On Loyalty

Bill for Discharge Of 'Bad Security Risks' Prepared At the Pentagon

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

The Administration is sponsoring legislation to broaden and make permanent the loyalty program for Federal employes in so-called "sensitive" agencies.

A bill to authorize the firing of civil service employes held to be "bad security risks" has been prepared at the Pentagon for submission to Congress within the next week or so. Formal clearance by the Bureau of the Budget is anticipated within a few days.

Chief aims of the measure are to:

1. Write into permanent law the authority now possessed by the Secretaries of State, Defense, Army, Navy and Air Force to fire disloyal or irresponsible employes. State now operates under legislation written into the annual appropriation bills and the armed forces under a temporary wartime act.

2. Extend this same authority to heads of other agencies dealing with security questions—specifically the Coast Guard, National Security Resources Board, National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, Atomic Energy Commission and certain Department of Defense sections not covered by the present law.

In addition, the President would be empowered to extend the terms of the law to other Government agencies which he may consider advisable "in the best interests of national security."

Could Be Wiped Out

3. Assure that a loyalty program be continued in these "sensitive" agencies dealing with security questions until repealed by Congress. The present Government-wide loyalty review system is based on an executive order and could be wiped out by a stroke of the pen of a future President.

Chief immediate effect of the bill, if passed, would be to widen the present authority to fire "dangerously indiscreet" employes. The heads of the Department of State and military departments now possess such power temporarily, but not the chiefs of the other "sensitive" agencies.

AEC has its own law on the subject, which would be continued, while the commission would also come under the general legislation.

Defense chiefs say there is no intention of interfering with the present loyalty program set up by Executive Order 9835 if the proposed bill becomes law. That order, issued by President Truman on March 21, 1947, established a Loyalty Review Board, within the Civil Service Commission, which is the final arbiter on the dismissal of employes charged with disloyalty.

Talkative Drunks Not Covered

But the executive order and the board have nothing to do with other "bad security risks," such as "talkative drunks," or other "indiscreet" persons, who can be as harmful to security as disloyal employes.

So long as Executive Order 9835 is in effect, say defense chiefs, disloyalty cases affecting their civilian employes will continue to be handled through that procedure and prosecutions under the act will be confined to "indiscretion cases."

The proposed bill is somewhat similar to a measure sponsored by the Administration during the

States Told How to Curb A-Bomb Toll

Preparing for Fewer Than 40,000-50,000 Seriously Burned Called Unrealistic

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

Preparation for the effects of atom bombing is the best way to minimize loss of life, the National Security Resources Board indicated yesterday.

The Atomic Energy Commission and the Defense Department jointly prepared a summary called "Medical Aspects of Atomic Weapons" for distribution by the NSRB. Sent to Governors of States and Territories and the District Commissioners, it warned that it would be "unrealistic" to prepare for fewer than 40,000 to 50,000 seriously burned individuals in case of an atomic explosion.

Data in the summary and recommendations incorporating them were based on a four-year study of casualties at Hiroshima and Nagasaki and on animal experiments. While the summary did not minimize the destructive capacity of the bomb, it held out much reason to believe deaths and crippling after-effects of atom bombing could be greatly curtailed by proper measures taken in advance.

Place a Major Factor

First of all, the summary pointed out, the effects of atom bombing in type as well as degree, would depend upon where the bomb was exploded in relation to the target. That is to say, burns, radiation or blast effect would vary in amount and intensity accordingly as the explosion occurred at high or low altitude or underwater nearby.

The summary also made it clear that building more powerful bombs than those already used might soon reach the point of diminishing returns. More powerful bombs, it said, could cause more widespread damage than the four-mile radius at Hiroshima but it would be necessary to double the power of the bomb each time the radius of severe damage and injury was increased by one-fourth.

Atom bomb damage to people, the summary said, would include that caused by the direct effect of the blast and that resulting indirectly from flying debris, collapse of buildings, secondary fires, and being thrown against solid objects.

In Japan, it said, these latter "mechanical" injuries differed little from those caused by conventional bombs. On the other hand, many direct injuries, in addition to those resulting from concussion, were directly attributable to the nature of the atomic blast.

These peculiar injuries included severe flash burns, radiation sickness and temporary blindness.

Medical Care Disorganized

In relation to the effect of prepaartion in advance, the summary said:

"Had proper medical care been available, it is . . . . probable that many of the Japanese who died from burns, as from other causes, might have been saved. The death totals (more than 100,000) must be weighed in relation to the fact that all medical care for days after the atomic blast was totally disorganized.

The problems involved in preparation and ultimate treatment were graphically illustrated by citing the requirements of "ideal" care for one burn patient, which included 42 tanks of oxygen, three nurses, 2.7 miles of gauze, 36 pints

No Trial Held Since October 20

Shortage of Judges Stalls Fatal Accident Prosecutions

By Joseph Paull
Post Reporter

Washington's most powerful weapon against fatal traffic accidents is jeopardized by a shortage of judges in Municipal Court, it was learned yesterday.

The weapon is prosecution for "negligent homicide" for which there is a penalty of up to a year in jail upon conviction.

Not one trial for this offense has been held in Municipal Court since October 20. There are now five cases charging the offense on the docket which date back as far as February 25, 1949.

The situation may become far worse if no judges are appointed to the bench in the near future, Chief Judge George P. Barse of Municipal Court indicated yesterday.

"I think we have done very well under the circumstances," he said. "I realize these cases are important, but the fact is that there just aren't enough judges to handle all the cases we have as fast as we would like to handle them."

Congress has authorized the addition of three judges to the present 10-judge bench, but the appointments have yet to be made by President Truman.

Judge Barse said, "I am confident that with the appointment of these judges we will be able to handle the work."

Barse said that illness and other factors have reduced his staff of judges to about seven or eight a day on the average, he estimated. This means that certain cases must be delayed, he said.

Every effort is made to see that all persons in jail get a speedy trial. Also, judges must be so distributed that no insuperable backlog in any category of cases develops, he said.

Current court figures indicated that during the past year, the total of all kinds of cases coming through the court has jumped 10,000, to almost 150,000 yearly.

Negligent homicide cases are now being prosecuted by Assistant United States Attorney Joseph Sommer, who said that under the circumstances he was powerless to prevent delay. Some of the cases have not even been definitely scheduled for trial, because of the crowded docket, he said.

A negligent homicide case generally proves to be most lengthy in the court, completely tying up a judge and jury for two or more days.

38 Women Die as Flames Sweep Mental Hospital

SMOKING SHELL—St. Elizabeths Mental Ward building of Mercy Hospital in Davenport, Iowa, is completely gutted as the result of disastrous fire

Davenport, Iowa, Jan. 7 (U.P.).—A predawn fire swept the women's mental building of Mercy Hospital today, and authorities said at least 38 and possibly 40 women died. Many were trapped in steel-barred rooms.

Firemen removed 37 bodies. Margaret Jane Webber, 93, Davenport, died several hours after she was carried to safety from the blazing buildings. Physicians said she died of shock.

Firemen removed also what officials believed was part of a torso. They were uncertain, however, whether it was part of one of the 37 bodies removed from the building. Coroner C. H. Wildman indicated he might not be able to decide until Sunday.

Hospital authorities raised the list of dead or missing when they discovered that Mrs. Arch Janes, 76, Atalissa, Iowa, who entered the mental ward only last night, could not be located.

Wildman said 25 persons, some of whom smashed windows with their fists as firemen and police ripped away the iron bars, were taken out alive.

Fire Chief Lester Schick sent his men home as darkness fell 15 hours after the flames raced through the 81-year-old building.

"I fully believe we have recovered every body that was in the building," Schick said. "However,

Russians Accused Of Paying Spies in U. S. Cigarettes

Vienna, Austria, Jan. 7 (U.P.).—The Russians are using millions of American cigarettes to pay off two known gangs of kidnapers and spies operating in Vienna and western Austria, United States officials said today.

"The Russians pay their agents in cigarettes instead of money for three reasons," one official said. "(1) Because the agents can find ready cover as black marketeers; (2) Because it harms Austrian economy, and (3) Because cigarettes are cheaper for the Russians to come by than any other item."

The officials said they had been tipped off that a total of 70 million American cigarettes, mostly popular brands, are being shipped from Hungary now and soon will appear on the black market here. At about $3 a carton—black market price—the cigarettes will bring close to one million dollars.

Belated Cold Erases D. C.'s 3-Day 'Spring'

The cold came over the mountains, yesterday, and dropped temperatures here to winter-like levels. At least two days more of cold can be expected, the weatherman said.

Prediction for early today was 26 degrees in the city and 22 in the suburbs, with mostly sunny and cold through the day and a high in the 30s.

High for yesterday was 66 at 12:01 a. m. The cold front, delayed for three days at the Appalachian and Blue Ridge Mountains, while Washington enjoyed record high temperatures, finally got across, and passed here at 1:30 a. m., the Weather Bureau said. Then the mercury began to drop, skidding 9 degrees between 2 and 3 a. m.

Almost the entire Atlantic seaboard was affected. Steady winds blew here at 30 miles per hour, with gusts to 38.

Phone Rate Rise Threatened In Wage Increase Demands

The Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. declared yesterday that any increased benefits it might be forced to give the CIO Communications Workers would "in the last analysis" have to be paid by the telephone users through higher rates.

In issuing the warning, the C. & P. denounced the union's plan to take a strike poll as "prejudicial" to negotiating a new demand for wage increases.

The local divisions of the Communications Workers of America, at the behest of the parent union, have scheduled a strike ballot among their 600 members so as to be in a position to call a walkout, if necessary, as part of the union's national strategy.

Locals 36 and 50 informed C. & P. only the past week that it wished to reopen the work contract on the matter of "wages" on February 1. The contract is a 3-year agreement, which expires next May, but the contract may be opened to negotiate a change in "wages."

C. H. Johnson, vice president and general manager of the public utility, said yesterday: "We have a strike threat over our heads almost a month before wage negotiations begin between the company and two unions representing our employes."

Johnson charged that the union negotiators "will come to the bargaining table with closed minds," and that the implied threat of a walkout unless the union demands are met are "prejudicial to real collective bargaining and an obvious attempt to agitate employes."

The C. & P. official denied a statement by CWA Vice President

Businessmen Propose Plan To Cut Taxes, Spending

CED Says Surplus For Retiring Debt Would Be Realized Under Its Proposal

By Alfred Friendly
Post Reporter

A group of businessmen yesterday proposed a Federal tax and spending program that will permit a modest decrease in taxes and still yield a surplus to retire Government debt if there is high employment.

The proposal was made by the Committee for Economic Development, an organization of nationally outstanding and progressive minded business leaders.

Conditions Cited

The suggested Government taxing and spending policy for next year would produce the anticipated results—leeway to reduce taxes by about $2¼ billion, and a surplus of another three billion dollars to retire Government debt—only if certain assumptions are fulfilled. These are:

1. That conditions of high employment are achieved. CED sees "high" employment when only about 4 percent of the labor force is unemployed. This is fairly close to "frictional" or least possible, unemployment. At present, about 3,500,000 are unemployed or about 5.7 percent of the labor force.

The situation of high employment is not a CED "forecast." It is simply an assumption used for purposes of drafting a budget policy.

2. That the Government reduce expenditures in the fiscal year 1951 by about $6.7 billion below current, fiscal 1950, spending.

As Permanent Policy

An interesting aspect of the report is its concept that whether or not the assumption of high employment is realized, this should be the Government tax and budget policy anyway.

This is consistent with the CED position, stated in other reports and Congressional testimony, that a budget and tax policy be set which will be steady over the years. It should be designed to yield a surplus for debt retirement in times of high economic activity, but would permit running a deficit when times are bad.

In other words, the CED does not believe in the need for a balanced budget every year. The budget and taxes should be such that in good times tax receipts would be high, bonds would be retired, thus reducing or reversing inflationary pressure. In bad

President's Budget To Be in New Form

President Truman's budget for 1950, which will be revealed to Congress Monday, will be in an entirely new form, the Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report disclosed last night.

"For the first time, the budget estimates have been prepared according to a pattern based on logic instead of one based on antiquated custom," Robert L. L. McCormick, director of research for the committee, said.

The new style, he said, will be a "performance budget" or "program budget." The change, he added, was recommended last year by the Hoover Commission for Reorganization of the Executive Branch of the Government.

Indorsed by Truman

The Hoover recommendations, McCormick said, were indorsed by President Truman last June 20, when he told Congress he had instructed the Budget Bureau to follow the new plan. Congress also directed that the budget for the military establishment adopt the new form, he added.

Formerly, budgets presented a tabulation of the financial plan for the year, chiefly in the language of proposed appropriation bills.

The new budget will present two plans: the financial plan, in tables of figures, and the "program" in narrative style, with the two related through performance data.

Where more than half of past appropriations have not been accompanied by any breakdown showing how the dollars would be related to the program, projects or activities to be carried on and the amount devoted to each.

The work output under many programs will be shown. In the future it is hoped the work output under every program will be set out. Under each program such things as the number of checks written, how many cases were handled, and how many other operations took place will be indicated. It will be possible, said McCormick, "to relate one operation to another, and to weed out the inefficient."

Profits and Losses

The new budget separates budget estimates between current expense and capital outlay, "as has been done in every major private enterprise for years," McCormick said. In addition, the activities schedule will show separately how much the Government spends in grants, subsidies and contributions.

The new budget provides for business-type budgets for 35 Federal agencies, including the Bonneville Power Administration and the Panama Canal. "We'll be able to see profit and loss statements for these agencies for the first time," McCormick added.

"Under the earlier system," McCormick said, "the Veterans' Administration could not tell how much it cost to run the Veterans life insurance program. The Navy could not tell what it costs to operate the Brooklyn Navy Yard."

Under the new budget the Government and the taxpayer, he said, have their attention centered on the cost of each operation.

Ham Imports From Poland Protested

By The Associated Press

Senator Guy Gillette (D., Iowa) wants to know why hams are being imported from Communist Poland.

He has put the question up to the Departments of Agriculture and State in letters he made public yesterday.

Gillette told the Agriculture Department he was trying to find "where the responsibile action was taken for the broadening or resumption of trade in competitive products with a nation which is one of the strongest within the Soviet orbit."

Department figures show 382,627 pounds of canned hams were imported from Poland during the first nine months of last year.

Savings Bond Sales in 1949 Nudge Record

Americans last year bought within a fraction of 1 percent as many Federal savings oonds as they did in the record year 1948, and they have been holding on to them in greater proportion.

Newly compiled Treasury figures show that during 1949, $4,207,598,000 of E bonds (denominations up to $1000) were purchased, and $3,447,896,000 were redeemed. The net margin of sales over redemptions was 53 percent more than the margin in 1948.

Generally speaking, Americans have chosen to hold on to their war bond purchases. Some 56 percent of all E bonds sold, from their beginning on May 1, 1941, to last December 31, are still in the hands of their purchasers. About $60 billion of them were issued; only about $26 billion have been redeemed.

The first series of E bonds will mature on May 1, 1951.

D Bonds Mature This Year

The D bonds of 1940, also similar to the E's, come to maturity this year. About $1 billion are still outstanding of an issue of $1,300,000,000. Thus, 77 per cent of them remained with their original owners up to maturity date.

The pattern of purchases of the big wartime and postwar issue, the E bonds, shows that the great majority of buyers chose to invest in the $25 denomination. The following table gives the picture:

Denomination	Per cent of total issued.
$10 (Armed services only)	1.7
25	68.6
50	14.9
100	11.3
200	0.3
500	1.5
1000	1.5

Earlier Maturities

Of the small-denomination savings bonds sold first—the As in 1935, Bs in 1936, Cs in 1937 and 1938—all have, of course, matured. And of the total, just short of 2 billion dollars, all but a proportionately small 57 million dollars have been presented for payment at maturity or redeemed earlier.

The first series of D bonds, sold in 1939, came to maturity last year. As of the end of the year, some 145 million dollars of them had not yet been presented for repayment.

Winter Blasts Return to D. C.

reau said, but fair weather will prevail here for at least two days.

More than 4000 persons were homeless in Illinois, Indiana, Missouri and Tennessee from floods which resulted from thawing weather and rains that swelled rivers. The Army threw battalions of soldiers into the fight to preserve levees and other protective works. Red Cross workers and supplies were hurried to stricken area.

Though high-river crests still threatened a number of points in the Mississippi, Ohio, and other river valleys last night, authorities said the greatest menace seemed past.

A new Canadian high pressure area, with cold weather, forced itself southward yesterday, from Minnesota to Texas, easing bad floods in the Middle West. Bad or extremely cold weather prevailed over most parts of the country. California citrus growers practically blacked out the southwestern part of the State with smoke from smudge pots to protect their crops from cold.

D. C. Bar Group Plans Taft-Hartley Debate

Participants will be John Gall, counsel for the Southern Coal Operators; Robert Denham, general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board; Thomas Harris, counsel for the CIO and Herbert S. Maryland Farms Hold Value; Others Slump

Maryland is one of the few States where farm real estate values did not drop last year.

West Virginia farms dropped an average of 10 percent in value; Virginia farm land went down 5 percent, and Delaware showed a slump of 2 percent as compared with November, 1948.

For the country as a whole, farm real estate values declined 6 percent, the Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the Department of Agriculture reported.

Eight Show Big Drop

Eight States showed a drop of 10 percent or more: Washington, Oregon, California, Montana, Colorado, Wyoming, Texas and West Virginia.

Only five States showed an increase, and only one—New Jersey—more than 2 percent above 1948. They were Minnesota, Iowa, Illinois, North Carolina and New Jersey. None of these States has shown any increase since last July.

Maryland farms that sold for $100 an acre in the base period—1912-14—sold both last year and this for $204. Virginia land that was worth $100 in 1912-14 was selling for $243 in 1948 and only $230 this year. The index for West Virginia dropped from $155 last year to $139 this year; Delaware from $163 to $160.

The BAE report indicated some farmers think that the long period of exceptional growing weather for some crops—wheat in particular—is over. "Drought conditions this summer over most of Montana and parts of North nad South Dakota created local concern that the prolonged period of unusually favorable moisture conditions may have ended," the report stated.

The bureau said trends in farm product prices are likely to be an important factor influencing values in various area sthis year.

Props to Cushion Fall

"The over-all effect of the various (Government) control and price support measures likely to be operating in 1950 will be to prevent a sharp decline in farm prices and thus help to prevent as sharp a drop in land values as might occur without controls," the bureau said.

However, the effects of Government programs on land values are likely to vary from area to area, the agency said.

Two of the major developments in the land market, the bureau said, has been a gradual reduction in the amount of funds available for purchase of farms and a more conservative lending policy being adopted by many lenders.

Commercial banks, in particular, were said to be tightening up in extending credit on land.

Move to Kill Oleo Bill Seen

A move to package repeal of oleomargarine taxes with a cutback of the wartime excise levies was launched yesterday by Dairy State senators.

Senator Fulbright (D., Ark.), quarterbacking the fight to repeal the oleo levies, immediately branded the action as an "obvious effort to kill the bill."

He and Senate Democratic Leader Lucas (D., Ill.), predicted the move would fail.

Both sides indicated they would be ready for a showdown vote Friday.

After a Dairy State strategy conference, Senator Butler (R., Nebr.) announced he would introduce an amendment to the oleo bill to repeal the 1943 wartime excise levies on such items as furs, jewelry, communications, transportation and admissions.

Earlier in the day, Chairman George (D., Ga.) of the Finance Committee told reporters he thought Congress should act immediately to cut the wartime excises. But prospects were that he would go along with Senate Democrats in opposing excise repeal as a part of the oleo bill.

The Dairy State strategy calls for the Butler amendment to be attached to a deal sponsored by Senators Gillette (D., Iowa) and Wiley (R., Wis.). This bill would repeal the tax of one fourth of a cent a pound on uncolored oleomargarine and the 10-cents-a-pound tax on yellow margarine, but ban the latter from interstate commerce. Oleo backers won't go along with the interstate ban.

Protestants Report Stoning in Italy

Rome, Jan. 7 (AP). — Young evangelists of the Protestant Church of Christ today said they were stoned out of Castel Gandolfo—summer home of Pope Pius XII—and three other Castel towns near Rome where they have been working.

One of them said "priests aroused the people against us." Italy's population is overwhelmingly Roman Catholic.

A Vatican source said priests in the Castel towns area had for several months complained that the Church of Christ evangelists were "teaching heresy."

There was no immediate comment from the State Department.

(In Abilene, Tex., Lynn Packer, prominent figure in Church of Christ activities in Texas, said that four months ago a jeep belonging to the church's orphanage in Italy was dynamited.

("An Italian boy lost a hand in the explosion," Packer said. "No arrests were made. Our evangelists in Italy have been encountering opposition for months. The situation will only increase our zeal to do our work over there.")

Nearly all of the 13 evangelists, who include six young married couples, are from Texas and obtain most of their support from Texas Churches of Christ.

The group has now engaged an attorney in efforts to obtain renewal of visas to remain in Italy and written permission to operate their orphanages. Thus far, they say, they have been unable to obtain it.

One missionary, K. D. Pittman, said the group had taken its problem for the past eight months from one Italian department to another and also to the American Embassy here seeking the written permission to operate its orphanage.

The group also conducts Bible classes in Rome and surrounding towns and plans to operate a school.

Pittman said that priests had preached against them in the Castel towns near Rome.

One quoted a priest as saying to his congregation:

"Why don't some 300 of you young men turn their jeeps over so they will know you do not want to become Protestants?"

Pittman said a gang of youths halted their jeep and began to flail it with sticks.

"Then they began to throw stones," Pittman said. "We got out of there. I don't know what would have happened in another moment."

300 Demanded

Finns Seize 6 As Start on Soviet List

Helsinki, Finland, Jan. 7 (U.P.)—Finnish police have arrested six persons in a "preliminary step" to meet the Soviet Union's demand for the return of 300 alleged "war criminals," reliable sources said today.

Other sources said a supplementary Soviet note, reiterating the demand for the return of the Russian war criminals, has arrived by courier and is being studied by the Foreign Ministry.

The original note, handed to the Finnish minister in Moscow on New Year's Eve by Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko, accused Finland of violating her treaty of friendship with Russia by aiding the criminals. It asked that they, including 56 "major offenders," be handed over to the Soviet Union at once.

Informants had no idea whether the order for the 300 could be met.

Most of those sought by the Russians were Baltic refugees who came to Finland before the war, they said.

"Most of them have changed their names. Some have gone on to Scandinavia. Of those who remain, many have changed in appearance, shaved or grown beards," a highly placed source said.

Foreign Ministry sources said not one of the persons listed in the Gromyko note ever had been sought by the Soviet Union before.

The note hit Finland in the midst of her first regular presidential campaign in 13 years.

Missile Bases Are Reported Aimed at Tito

Vienna, Austria, Jan. 7 (U.P.)—Launching bases for guided missiles aimed at Yugoslavia will be completed by the end of this month in the Matra Mountains in Hungary, the Titoist publication "Hungarian Communist" reported today.

"Hungarian Communist" said construction of the bases was announced by Hungarian Defense Minister Mihaly Farkas at a secret Cominform military conference in Hungary November 15.

Western sources here agreed that their informants also have told them the Cominform is building a wall of guided missile bases around most of Yugoslavia.

The publication also asserted that the conference adopted a resolution calling on the Soviets "to give the signal for the start of a planned military aggression against Yugoslavia at an opportune moment."

4 Persons Hanged By Czechs as Spies

Prague, Czechoslovakia, Jan. 7 (U.P.)—A butcher, a factory owner and two other men convicted of espionage for an unnamed foreign power were hanged at dawn today after the Brno Supreme Court rejected their appeals for mercy.

The official news agency said the four were leaders of a group that had assassinated one public official and had tried to carry out other slayings, all unsuccessful.

Neither the name of the dead official nor the place of the assassination was revealed.

Acheson Presses New Dollar-Shortage Attack

By The Associated Press

Secretary of State Acheson has given an urgent, top priority in the State Department to development of a new line of attack on the world dollar shortage, it was learned yesterday.

The conviction is spreading among some of his top advisers that more billions for European and other foreign assistance will be required after the end of the Marshall Plan in 1952.

Some officials now say privately that the United States probably will have to consider continuing foreign assistance for an indefinite number of years.

[Paul G. Hoffman yesterday predicted that another five billion dollars of American aid would wind up the Marshall Plan and set Europe well on the road to recovery by mid-1952, the United Press reported.

[The economic aid chief made that forecast to 15 American editors who are leaving New York Sunday for a look at the Marshall Plan in action in Britain, France, Italy and western Germany.

[Hoffman said 10 billion dollars already has been appropriated for the European Recovery Program and that the job could be finished by June 30, 1952, for a total outlay of 15 billion dollars. That would be two billion dollars less than was expected when the project got under way in the summer of 1948.]

Acheson's personal preference reportedly would be a further opening up of American markets. It is likely that he will throw his main emphasis on a tariff-cutting, import-expanding policy.

But his associates, and presumably Acheson himself, regard that as a slow process and unlikely to reach full development before the Marshall Plan ends.

State Department experts are reported to be convinced that unless the United States and allied nations begin preparing shortly for the end of the Marshall Plan, the cold war gains of the past two years may easily be lost.

Europe's newly won economic stability, they argue, may give way if its American dollar props are withdrawn completely.

Acheson feels that official estimates of the post-Marshall Plan outlook must be completed and presented to the American people as soon as possible, because within a year the questions involved will raise major congressional issues.

Officials agree that the billions thus far spent have saved western Europe from Communist conquest. They say that trade prospects among the European countries themselves are improved, but not to the poin' where leaders can look forward to a self-sufficient interchange of goods by mid-1952.

British Press Backs Red Recognition

London, Jan. 7 (AP).—The British press—Labor, Conservative and Communist—today generally approved Britain's recognition of the Communist regime in China.

Contributing to the approval was President Truman's statement that the United States has no intention of aiding Chinese Nationalists in defending Formosa.

But Britain was still concerned over how deeply the new policy would affect such questions as Communist China's membership in the United Nations and next year's Marshall plan aid from the United States.

She had expected stern protests against her action from some sections of the American Congress, especially among Republicans. Protests came, but they were not as sharp as had been expected.

The Communist Daily Worker said Britain's action was a "belated acknowledgement that the people's revolution in the greatest of all Asiatic lands has triumphed beyond any doubt."

Lord Beaverbook's Daily Express termed recognition of Mao wise, but said this policy must be supplemented by "determination and ability to defend empire interests in Hongkong and Malaya."

The Laborite Daily Herald asked whether recognition could be a "prelude to friendly relations and to useful economic interchange" and said the answer depended on Mao.

Lake Success, N. Y., Jan. 7 (U.P.). Reports that France will delay recognizing the Chinese Reds appeared today to have given the Chinese Nationalist delegation to the United Nations a temporary ease on life.

U. N. observers, while agreeing that the Nationalists' days are numbered, figure the French stand will forestall for a time the creation of the necessary seven Security Council votes to oust the Nationalists from that No. 1 U. N. organ.

Taipei Formosa, Jan. 7 (U.P.)—The Chinese Nationalists today ordered the Norwegian diplomatic mission to leave Formosa, but Britain, without formal diplomatic relations, still was doing business at its consulate.

Hainan Claims 500 Red Junks Sunk by Planes

Hongkong, Jan. 7 (AP). — The Chinese Nationalists reported increasing air raids and guerilla operations today against the Communists on the mainland.

The Nationalist defense ministry on Formosa announced its guerillas had captured four county seat towns in the provinces Fukien, Kwantung and Hunan, all in south and southeast China.

Earlier the Nationalists claimed they had used air power to smash a second Red attempt to invade Hainan Island, just off the south coast. Their account said they sank about 500 of a fleet of junks.

[The Communist radio in Peiping said the southwest China campaign was "fundamentally concluded" December 27.

[The broadcast, heard in San Francisco by the Associated Press, said Gen. Liu Po-cheng announced conclusion of the campaign at a rally in Chungking January 1. He was quoted as saying the only remaining tasks were to "eradicate the scattered enemy remnants" and "liberate our compatriots in Tibet"]

Cut Proposed In British Aid

the basic problem of whether to continue aid to "so-called allies in the cold war who give in to communism."

On the Democratic side, Senator Walter F. George (Ga.) blamed the Formosa debacle on President Roosevelt.

He said President Roosevelt "bungled" at the Cairo conference by agreeing with Winston Churchill and Chiang Kai-shek to give Formosa to China instead of leaving its ultimate disposal to the Japanese peace treaty.

Senator George further contended that the concessions President Roosevelt made to Stalin at Yalta resulted in "virtually turning over Manchuria to the Russians." This was "a frightful mistake," he said, adding: "We have probably transferred (to the Soviet) the future steel-making center of the world.

The continuing outcry over the loss of China confronted Secretary Acheson with a number of dilemmas as he prepared the policy address he will deliver Thursday before the National Press Club. On Tuesday, he will brief the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

In an effort to soften the impending loss of Formosa, Secretary Acheson is expected to emphasize the importance of strengthening French Indo-China, where the major part of the French army, around 150,000 troops, is now deployed.

The State Department is planning de facto recognition of the new semi-autonomous state of Viet Nam, which includes 40 percent of the territory and 60 percent of the population of Indo-China and has a common frontier with Communist China. Although none too enthusiastic over the ability of former Emperor Bai Dai, chief of the new state, the State Department sees no alternative leader and will support French efforts to stabilize his regime.

FBI Loyalty Check Clears 99.6 Percent

The Federal Bureau of Investigation has caught up with its loyalty investigations of Federal employes, Chief J. Edgar Hoover said yesterday.

Since the President ordered loyalty checks in March, 1947, the FBI has processed 2,713,537 loyalty forms and made 11,403 full field investigations. Of those processed, he added, 99.6 per cent were cleared.

Hoover declared that despite charges of "witch hunts" and "hysteria" directed at the FBI, every effort was made to establish the innocence of persons who were "victims of groundless rumor or suspicion." In any event, he said the FBI's responsibility ended when facts secured were turned over to loyalty hearing boards for adjudication.

Currently, he said, 71 investigations of incumbents and 223 investigations of appointees are under way.

Permanent Law Is Sought on Worker Loyalty

Eightieth Congress. But there are significant changes—all liberalizing the procedure in favor of the accused.

The earlier bill, which passed the Senate but died on the House calendar, authorized the "summary dismissal" of an employe in the "absolute discretion" of the agency head. There was provision for investigation and review, but it was not spelled out and the adequacy of the procedure would have been largely up to the departmental chief.

Only Summary Suspensions

Under the proposed legislation, departmental and agency heads still would have "absolute discretion" but only could make "summary" suspensions. Subsequent dismissals in the case of American citizens holding permanent or indefinite appointments could be ordered only after the following procedure:

1. The employe is given a written statement of the charges against him, stated as specifically "as security considerations permit."
2. He is given a reasonable opportunity to answer the charges and submit affidavits.
3. A hearing is held, if demanded, by duly constituted agency authority.
4. If the decision is against the employe, it must be reviewed by the agency head or a reviewing officer.
5. A written statement of the decision is issued by the agency head.

Another provision of the new bill permits a suspended employe to be reimbursed for pay lost, if reinstated—not in the 1948 measure.

Also, the right of a person dismissed for loyalty reasons to seek reemployment in another Government agency is not barred per se, as under the old bill. The 1948 bill permitted "indiscreet" employes to be rehired only with the consent of the agency firing him. Under the new measure, reemployment of any discharged employe would be left to the discretion of the Civil Service Commission and the hiring agency.

Hotel Engineers Threaten Strike

Officers of Local 99, AFL stationary engineers, will seek specific authority, at a meeting Tuesday night, to strike 10 major Washington hotels in an effort to win a pay scale of $1.92½ an hour.

The stationary engineers, who run and maintain the heating, hot-water and air conditioning systems, currently are getting $1.12½ to $1.50 an hour at the hotels. The union insists that $1.50 an hour is a substandard wage in its craft, that 75 percent of their journeymen are getting $1.92½ an hour in the Washington area.

A strike by the local would pull out about 150 employes of these hotels: Wardman Park, Shoreham, Carlton, Statler, Continental, Lafayette, Willard, Washington, Raleigh, Hamilton.

Jesse West, Local 99's business agent, said that the union's negotiators had offered the hotels two years in which to attain the scale pay, and was not demanding $1.92½ an hour in one jump. The hotels have done nothing more than offer the old contracts, according to West.

The business agent pointed out that the local recognizes its key positon in the hotels, and therefore has refrained up to now from striking. The old contract expired December 15.

The local's executive committee had also planned to ask the membership meeting Tuesday for specific power to strike six Washington theaters, but this move was postponed yesterday when New York representatives of the movie houses agreed to come here next week for conferences. The theaters involved are the Capitol, Palace, Warner, Metropolitan, Tivoli and Trans-Lux.

Prior to 1920, according to union officials, the stationary operators were one of the highest paid crafts in the country; by 1946 it had fallen to among the lowest.

The last big strike called by Local 99, West said, occurred in 1932, against two dairies here. In 1947, the local won a wage increase for its engineers by pulling a two-hour strike against the two medical office buildings on either side of Doctors' Hospital but wthout striking the hospital itself.

C&P Fights Wage Boost

A. T. Jones that the wages of telephone employes are at an "unsatisfactory level." Johnson maintained that C. & P. workers' wages are among the best, and that based on a comprehensive study of wage levels, compare favorably with the wages paid by other concerns in Washington for work requiring comparable skill, knowledge and capacity.

"More than 50 percent of our employes will receive wage increases this year," Johnson said. Such progressive increases on an annual basis amounted to $500,000 in 1949. These raises come along regularly.

Seven annual wage increases have been granted C & P employes during the war and postwar periods, according to Johnson. He said, for example, telephone repairmen who came to work for the company eight years ago were now earning $5000 a year on the average, and operators, $3000 a year.

Vice President Johnson said that C. & P. workers, besides getting good wages, receive "a great deal more." He listed regular and steady employment, eight holidays a year with pay, paid vacations up to three weeks, sickness benefits up to a year, accident and death benefits up to a year's pay, and a liberal service pension.

"Under these circumstances, I see no reason nor justification for union representatives to come to the bargaining table armed with a strike threat," Johnson declared.

The C.&P. executive warned that the question of telephone wage increases "must be considered not only from the viewpoint of the unions but also from the viewpoint of the public we service."

Johnson insisted that rate increases have lagged "well behind" increases in wages, which represent 71 percent of operating costs. The C.&P. has not yet recovered through increased rates the amount of the wage increases, ranging from $2 to $4 a week, negotiated last year, Johnson said. The Public Utilities Commission is currently studying a C.&P. request for a rate boost.

"In the final analysis, it is the telephone user who must pay for further wage increases in the form of higher rates," Johnson warned.

day instead of three-day work week as a result of their complaint to the NLRB. The producers say Lewis' no-day and three-day work weeks in 1949 increased their output costs by 75 cents a ton.

Senator Taft yesterday said the three-day work week was really a strike because "they won't work for two days." The Ohioan said he guessed that Mr. Truman has delayed invoking the Taft-Hartley Act against John L., in the belief Lewis would like such action. "Then Lewis could damn Truman and take himself off the spot," Taft conjectured.

President Truman offered no comment yesterday on Taft's demand. The White House did say that the President was informed, by his labor adviser, Dr. John R. Steelman, of an official complaint about the coal situation by an Administration right-arm Senator Scott Lucas (D., Ill.), Senate majority leader, told Dr. Steelman Friday that something must be done about the coal shortage.

Several Republicans demanded Executive or congressional action to increase coal production almost as soon as the Eighty-first Congress went back to work last week. Yesterday, Senator Henry C. Dworshak (R., Idaho) added his voice of protest. He said there were communities in his State which were short of fuel in subzero weather. He said the President's failure to use Taft-Hartley was "tragic."

Textile Worker Union Won't Ask Wage Hike

New York, Jan. 7 (AP).—The CIO Textile Workers of America announced today it would seek no wage increases during the next contract year for some 90,000 cotton and rayon textile industry workers in the New England area and in three Middle Atlantic States.

The announcement was made by Emile Rieve, international president of the union, after a meeting of 400 delegates of the union's locals.

Births Top 3,500,000 For 3d Year in U. S.

The stork had no rest last year, delivering some 3,700,000 babies in United States, according to Metropolitan Life Insurance Company statistics.

It marked the third successive year in which the number of births exceeded 3,500,000, an unprecedented record in the Nation's history.

The 1994 total was virtually the same as the previous year's and only 5 percent below the all-time peak of 1947.

Stratistically, the general health record in the United States was also good, with the death rate for the year 9.7 for each 1000 population, about 2 percent under the previous minimum set in 1948.

Together, the two factors plus a sizable immigration increased the Nation's population by about 2,500,000 during 1949. It brings the total population figure to approximately 150,000,000.

"During the 1940s," the insurance company observed, "the Nation's population grew at a record pace, increasing by 19 million. This is higher than for any previous decade in our history, and almost double the increase from 1930 to 1940."

During Week

123 Hurt In D. C. Home Accidents

Home accidents last week injured 123 District residents, among them a 19-month-old boy who burned his lips and tongue when he placed a live electric wire in his mouth, the District Red Cross accident prevention service reported yesterday.

Among other victims were a 2-year-old girl who suffered injuries to her inner ear when she jumped while her father was attempting to remove wax from the ear with a hairpin; a 48-year-old woman whose finger had to be amputated after she caught it in a door; a 7-year-old boy who lost the tips of two fingers in a meat grinder, and a 3-year-old girl had to be treated at Gallinger Hospital after eating a combination of flour, starch and paper.

The weekly report listed 47 falls, 16 burns, two accidental poisonings, two coal gas asphyxiations, 15 foreign bodies, 20 cuts and 21 miscellaneous.

Plan to Install Fire Box in New Precinct Dropped

District officials have ordered plans for the new Fourteenth Precinct Police Station altered to delete a fire alarm box planned for inside the building.

Director of Construction Archie G. Hutson said a box would be "superfluous" in the two-story structure since the station house will be constantly manned by several persons and is only 100 feet from an outside box.

The stationhouse is under construction at 42d st. and Benning rd. ne.

Ohio Doctor Says He Can't Cure Boy, 7

A Columbus, Ohio, physician has not been able to hold out hope of recovery to parents of 7-year-old Jerry Moser, now suffering from leukemia, the fatal blood disease, in Alexandria Hospital.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Moser of 802 Southview ter., Alexandria, wired the Columbus doctor, after seeing a newspaper account of the 12,000-mile trip made to the Ohio hospital from Singapore by a young sufferer from "a fatal blood disease."

They said yesterday the physician wired back, had replied that he had no new treatment for the disease and said Jerry is receiving "the best medical care available." The 7-year-old is being given frequent transfusions, his doctor said.

Jerry was reported "cheerful" yesterday at the hospital, where authorities said he has rallied from a New Year's Day relapse when "it seemed he couldn't last the night."

U. S. Marriage Rate Off An Eighth in '49

New York, Jan. 7 (NYHT).—The number of marriages in the United States in 1949 was about 1,580,000, the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. said today, a decline of an eighth from 1948 and nearly a third less than the record 2,291,000 in 1946. Despite the continued postwar decline, the company said, the rate is still above the prewar level and higher than the average for the four decades from the beginning of the century.

N. Virginia Tournament To End Today

The Northern Virginia Championship Bridge Tournament will wind up its three-day stand at the Hotel Roosevelt here with two sessions of open team-of-four play this afternoon and evening.

The event, sponsored by the Washington Bridge League, has attracted the largest crowds since before the war, Tourney Manager James Stone said. About 200 were on hand last night as Dan Harris of Parkfairfax and Richard Muhloland of Falls Church stepped out to an early commanding lead in the open-pair competition.

Washington players have won three titles in the early sessions. The mixed-pair title was won by Dr. and Mrs. A. J. Steinberg; Mrs. T. M. Boyle and Mrs. M. R. Reddy won the women's pair honors, and the men's pair title resulted in a tie between J. D. Boyd and John R. Moore and James G. Stone and Lewis G. Tubbs.

Post 17 Banned In Irish War Veteran Row

George L. Cassiday, national commander of the Irish War Veterans, yesterday announced he has suspended D. C. Post No. 17, from which he was "expelled" last month.

Commenting, "I wouldn't pay any attention to that," Charles J. McAuliffe, commander of the suspended post, said a demand for Cassiday's removal was lodged with the national board of directors three weeks ago.

The demand, McAuliffe said, was based on charges leveled when Cassiday and his national judge advocate, Morris A. Bealle, were expelled from Post No. 17 on December 2.

The expulsion, Cassiday said, was passed "purely as a spite measure," and contituted "conduct prejudicial" to the IWV.

Cassiday said he left the post some days before the expulsion and joined the George S. Patton Post No. 7 which he created under his authority as national commander.

Charges will be aired at a meeting of the national board of directors in Philadelphia, January 20.

'Reverse' Flying Found to Be Safer

By The Associated Press

Airplane passengers of the future may ride backward for protection against crash injuries.

The Air Force disclosed yesterday that volunteers "duplicating" plane crashes in a rocket-propelled sled have withstood tremendous forces by facing to the rear.

It said a number of these experimental "crashes" have been made at Edwards Air Force Base, Muroc, Calif. The tests have provided heretofore unobtainable information on just how much of the terrific decelerative force encountered in a crash the human body can safely withstand.

Apparently, with proper support, it can withstand plenty.

The contraption used in the experiments was developed for the Air Force by Northrop Aircraft, Inc. Dubbed a "human decelerator," it is a sled that is guided by railway tracks and propelled by solid fuel rockets into a series of mechanical brakes.

Six volunteer airmen have undergone decelerative forces up to 35 times the force of gravity while facing forward and backward on the sled.

Seated in a backward position, the volunteers withstood a force of 35 times the force of gravity with little difficulty. Facing forward, they had to be strapped in with a special harness.

How Would You Like to Ride This 'Sled'?

On Motorboats

'Safe Bilge' Developed to Halt Blasts

As a lad, Horace J. Price was fascinated by boats, and that was natural because he was raised in New Rochelle, N. Y., on Long Island Sound.

Price

With the fascination came a strong conviction that something ought to be done about motorboat explosions. Young Price saw the small boats—or even yachts—smashed to bits time and again out of the sound when gasoline accumulated in bilgewater and later ignited.

But for a long time, Price and the gasoline danger were like most people and the weather—he talked about it a lot, but he didn't do anything about it.

All that was changed last March when one of his friends, Dr. Charles M. Beall of Washington, was burned in a boat explosion while vacationing off Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

Price got to work. Now he has patent pending for something called a "safety bilge" which he thinks is just about foolproof for preventing gasoline vapor explosions in motor boats.

Price, now 46, and a resident at 9319 Glenville rd., Silver Spring, Md., gave the public its first look at his invention at the current motor boat show in New York.

Price thinks his safety bilge is good because it won't be expensive to produce, and a gallon of it would last the ordinary pleasure boat cruiser for a season.

The theory is simple. He has used a petroleum base for 50 percent of the compound. The compound is placed in the bottom of a gasoline-motored boat where there is always at least a little water.

What has caused explosions in the past is the fact that gasoline will float on water, and when the engine starts, the gasoline vapors may ignite and explode.

With Price's safety bilge, he contends, the gasoline, water and petroleum-based compound emulsify. The gasoline doesn't float. There is no explosion danger.

Price has been given financial backing by two Silver Spring businessmen in his "safety bilge" project. They are Charles A. Block of the Glenville rd. address, Price's brother-in-law, and John B. Thompson, 9111 Crosby rd.

Price is president of Eastern Products Co., 13 4th st. ne., which sells disinfectants, insecticides and other household products. He said he is not a chemist, although he has done other experiments with chemical mixtures. He is married and has a 14-year-old son, Norman.

Two Chargers Built for Navy Submarines

Two huge mobile battery chargers for docked submarines are being built for the Navy by the General Electric Co.

The units, to be installed in 50-ton railroad boxcars, will be used to charge the electric batteries from which submarines draw power for underwater operations.

At present, Navy spokesmen said, only the major naval installations have power plant-to-dock facilities for charging submarine batteries. The subs, however, have generators to charge their own batteries, in operation.

The new battery chargers will be mounted in special, 60-foot boxcars, as large as any railroad boxcars yet built. Each will hold a three-unit motor-generator set and two two-unit motor generator sets.

The equipment will convert the normal 2300-volt alternating current available at the site into the lower voltage, direct current needed to recharge the submarine's batteries and to provide current for the submarine's lighting system and general electric power needs while in port.

When completed next April, the mobile units will be sent to Bremerton, Wash., and Charleston, S. C., naval shipyards.

Mrs. de Hesse Fights Son in Will Case

Mrs. Elizabeth de Hesse, wife of Prince Christian of Hesse, yesterday asked District Court to enjoin her son Richard from removing "several hundred thousands of dollars" worth of securities from a safety deposit box.

The suit, filed by Attorney David Fegan, was a second step in a court battle opened Friday by Mrs. de Hesse over the estate of her father, the late Richard Reid Rogers, prominent New York and Washington attorney who died November 10.

Mrs. de Hesse is seeking to have wills he left be declared invalid. One of the wills was dated November 16,1948, and left the bulk of his $495,490 estate to her four children.

According to yesterday's suit, Richard de Hesse of Houston, Tex., has asserted that the escurities in the safety-deposit box were either given to him outright by Rogers or placed in trust with him pending distribution among Rogers' four grandchildren.

The securities, according to the suit, are deposited with the American Security & Trust Co. here.

and the decision was appealed, enough money could be obtained through subscriptions to cover appeals court expenses.

The federation has based its fight on the increase on assertions that the higher rates would take effect on gas used before the increase was made effective; that the increase discriminated against certain classes of users, and that the Washington Gas Light Co. was allowed to include the value of abandoned property in its rate base.

In its move to deactivate the two local military bases, the Federation joined the Washington Board of Trade and a number of Southeast Washington Citizens associations which have previously called for the step.

Local military traffic, the resolution stated, interferes with ordinary conversation, church services, school classes and, in fact, all public communications.

It also noted that military planes using Bolling and Anacostia have had to make forced landings east of the Anacostia River and others "have barely escaped crashing into the same section of the city."

This situation, the resolution said, would be aggravated by increase in Bolling-Anacostia traffic brought about by recent ban on tactical military craft at National Airport.

Copies of the measure were ordered sent to the Secretary of Defense, the Civil Aeronautics Administration and appropriate Congressional committees.

The Federation expressed its belief that an "error" was made in the formation of the Sesquicentennial Commission in leaving out representations of organized citizens groups. Participation of these groups, the Federation held, was essential to the success of the enterprise.

"We might be starting a black market in taxi licenses," declared Joseph St. Peter, River Terrace delegate, in defending the resolution to oppose limiting taxi licenses.

Other delegates argued that the Senate measure would rightfully eliminate part-time cabbies with outside employment, who, they said, were unreliable.

The Public Utilities Committee was ordered to make a study of a suggestion, indorsed by the Interfederation Council, that the District Commissioners be urged to get behind a movement for establishment of a Metropolitan Area Public Utilities Commission.

Mrs. Franklin G. Sartwell reported that she had conferred last week with the District Commissioners about their possible indorsement of the Sasscer area commission bill. She urged all sections of the citizenry to build up pressure for a public hearing on the bill.

Hospital Fire Fatal to 38

the intensity of the fire in some places was such that one or more bodies may have been wholly consumed."

He said there was a "remote possibility" one or two patients might have escaped from the grounds in the excitement.

Some patients who escaped suffered minor burns or other injuries and were treated by weeping robed nuns while firemen, police and chaplains sought to rescue or aid others.

Cause of the fire had not been determined, but there were unconfirmed reports it might have been caused by a patient smoking in bed. The building, the frame structure of which had been reinforced with brick, was a total loss and firemen tore down three of its tottering walls.

All the victims were patients except nurses aide, Mrs. Anna Neal, who died in an attempt to lead patients to safety, and Miss Margaret Tubberty, 86, of Davenport. Hospital authorities said Miss Tubberty was a resident of the hospital, but not a patient. They said she lived there before it was converted into a mental ward.

Shick said the lack of a sprinkler system, which the Fire Department two years ago recommended be installed, was a feator in the incredible speed with which the fire flashed through the building.

Nurse Ellen Hildebrand, on duty in the hospital's main building, spotted the fire shortly after 2 a. m. The first alarm was turned in at 2:07 a. m. Firemen had to race two miles to reach the hospital, on a hilltop outside the city limits.

The screams of the trapped patients spurred attendants, firemen and policemen, who rushed into the building and guided many to safety.

Like "Bewildered Animals"

Patrolman Richard Fee climbed a ladder, pried iron bars from a window, and saved a group of women huddled together amidst flames like "bewildered animals."

Fire Lieut. Albert Koranda, in charge of the first company to reach the scene, said rescue attempts were hampered by lack of water pressure and slowed by the barred windows and doors.

"It was just plain hell," he said. "It burned like paper."

He said flames were coming from first and second-floor windows when he arrived and the screams of the trapped patients chilled even the most seasoned firemen.

He said fire flashed upward through the building through an open stairway and an elevator shaft.

Although the hospital was for women, three men were in custody there. All escaped.

The speed with which the fire spread through the building recalled the disastrous fire at St. Anthony's Hospital in Effingham, Ill., last April 5, when 75 persons, including 12 babies, died.

of plasma, 40 pints of whole blood and 100 pints of other fluids plus drugs such as morphine and the antibiotics. The summary added that not all burn cases would require treatment of such extent but that the case cited indicated the magnitude of the task of treating burns alone.

Radiation need not be cause for despair, the summary pointed out, unless the dose is of such magnitude as to forestall all treatment. Many cases which woud have been abandoned as hopeless on the basis of earlier knowledge, it said, can be saved by whole blood transfusions, control of infection, intravenous feeding, and control of the tendency to bleed. This treatment would be assisted, it added, by the fact that a considerable time may elapse between exposure and prostration.

Experience on mice have led to the conclusion, the summary said, that the likelihood of parents having deformed children after less than deadly doses of radiation was "very slight." No genetic effects among the Japanese of Hiroshima and Nagasaki have been noted, the summary continued, but perhaps 25 years must elapse before definite conclusions can be reached on the effect of radioactivity on heredity in humans.

Cartridge Blows Boy's Eye Out

CARROLL E. MYERS
Loses eye

A Cabin John, Md., boy lost one eye yesterday when a blank cartridge which he struck with a hammer exploded.

Carroll Edward Myers, 17, son of Mrs. Frances Myers, of 7625 MacArthur blvd., was playing with an empty .32 cartridge in his back yard. The powder had been removed but the percussion cap remained. While his 13-year-old brother, William, and a neighbor, Jimmy Shroat, 14, looked on, Carroll struck the cartridge with a hammer.

The explosion drove the shell into his left eye, narrowly missing going through to the brain.

The boy was hurried to Suburban Hospital, Bethesda, by the Glen Echo Rescue Squad, and then removed to the Episcopal, Eye, Ear and Throat Hospital.

The eye was removed in an emergency operation and hospital authorities said the boy was improving last night. The other eye was not affected, the surgeon told the boy's mother.

Carroll is a ninth-grade student at Leland Junior High School. His father, Thomas Myers, a former employe of the Capital Transit Co., died last September.

Husband Held In Slaying Of Wife, 24

Halethorpe, Md., Jan. 7. (AP).—A 24-year-old mother was shot to death today after returning home from a date with her husband's best friend, police reported.

The husband, Joseph Robert Patton, 25, was charged with murder. Cpl. Robert O. Mullikin of the Baltimore county police said Patton admitted that he had shot his wife, Mrs. Anne Patton.

Patton was found weeping beside his wife's body in their home here.

Authorities said that when the shots were fired, the unidentified friend was outside the house cleaning his car.

Mullikin said he and other policemen were given this account of the shooting:

Mrs. Patton went out last night with a lifetime friend who had served in the Navy with Patton during the war. Patton went out later, apparently to look for them.

Mrs. Patton and the friend returned home at 6 a. m. There was a long discussion in the house among the three of them.

Shortly after 11 a. m., neighbors heard five shots.

When police arrived, they found Mrs. Patton slumped over a couch in the small bungalow. She had been shot three times in the left chest.

A .22 caliber rifle was propped against the wall, a few feet from a decorated Christmas tree.

Armed Woman Foils Purse Snatching by Firing Three Shots

Purse snatchers had bad luck in two attempts early yesterday morning to make off with the pocketbooks of homeward-bound women.

As a result, two men are charged withrobbery and one faces an additional count of mayhem. In another case the intended victim drew a gun from her pocketbook and fired three shots at her assailant. A third snatching was successful.

The armed victim was Mrs. Maurieta (Gordon) Harley, of 3820 Hayes st. ne., a piano player at Aaron's Restaurant.

She was on her way home at 2:30 a. m., when at Hayes st. and Kenilworth ter. ne., she said, a man threw her to the ground and grabbed for her pocketbook. She hung on, opened it, and pulled out a .32 caliber revolver.

Three Shots

Seeing it, the man fled, she said, and she fired three shots at him. She told police that a year ago in New York, she was frightened by an attempt to beat and rob her and has carried the gun since. She said she does not know if she hit the man.

At 12:30 a. m., Suzie Parrott, 1910 1st st. nw., screamed to Ernest Boozer, a cab driver, that two men had taken her pocketbook, containing $18, and were making off with it. The scene was near her home. Boozer followed, and notified Police Pvt. Lawrence B. Raney, who was walking his Thirteenth Precinct beat.

A foot pursuit started in which one of the alleged snatchers escaped. The second scaled a high fence, with Boozer behind him. Raney couldn't quite make it to the top, so he commandeered another cab and circled. Raney caught the man whom Boozer had let go.

Boozer said the man bit him severely on the finger and right thigh. As a result, Thomas E. Millard, 22, of 28 O st. nw., was charged with robbery and mayhem. United States Commissioner C. S. Lawrence continued his case to January 18, and held him in $10,000 bond.

Later, police arrested Arthur B. Roane, 20, of 1423 I st. nw., in the case, and charged him with robbery. Commissioner Lawrence set $2000 bond on him.

Earlier, a man, believed by police to be the same one who the 4800 block of Quarles st. ne., was shot at, grabbed Bernice Burne, 31, of 1315 49th st. ne., in cents.

Why pay for duplicate electric systems where one will do the job?

ONE OF VIRGINIA'S great assets is Vepco's extensive electric transmission network which carries electric service to a majority of its citizens.

The Old Dominion Electric Cooperative now wants to borrow $14,760,000 to build a completely unnecessary power station and 966 miles of equally unnecessary transmission lines which will crisscross and largely duplicate Vepco's network. Fifteen million dollars is a lot of money! And more will undoubtedly be required.

A Waste of Public Money

This project will not improve the reliability of the power supply of the REA Co-ops. It will actually reduce the sources of power available to them. It will not bring electricity to a single additional farm and it will not reduce the cost of the electricity which the REA Co-ops distribute. It is a wasteful expenditure of public money.

A Socialistic Project

Naturally, since the REA, a government bureau, will lend these Co-ops the full amount of the construction program—almost $15,000,000 at 2% interest for 35 years, with no interest or principal payments for the first five years—REA will retain practically complete control of the Co-ops by virtue of its loan agreements. REA headquarters are in Washington.

Plainly, any way you look at it, this is another socialistic project. It will compete unfairly with the private power industry in Virginia. The time has come when no Virginian can afford to continue to be indifferent to what is going on in our country . . . for when the Government controls everything, you, the individual, will control nothing!

Look how Socialism has almost engulfed Europe! It can happen here if Americans let it. Think it over . . . talk it over . . . discuss it with your friends and neighbors . . . with your fellow-workers . . . with your family. Socialism—the threat of a socialistic state—is everyone's problem because it is everyone's danger!

What About You?

If socialized electric power is good, then socialized business of all kinds is good. Government already competes with too many private businesses. Do you want it to compete with others including perhaps your own? Until the people vote for Socialism in this country, let's all resist having it thrust upon us through the back door. Let's resist it every step of the way!

Shelve New Hume Plans, Early Urges

By Judy Spivak
Post Reporter

Arlington School Superintendent William A. Early yesterday recommended that the school board shelve plans to build a new Hume Elementary School. He said it should put the funds instead into a new junior high school to serve South Arlington.

Admitting the present Hume building is "totally inadequate" Early also recommended conversion of the 600-pupil Dolly Madison Junior High to an elementary school. It could serve some present Hume students, plus children from the Shirley Homes and Arna Valley developments, he said.

Early also disclosed yesterday that a 1200-pupil senior high school to serve South Arlington is the next item on the school board's construction program.

The senior high should be built within "two or three years" and "means another bond issue," Early said.

Three or four sites for the high school, estimated to cost $2,500,000, are now being studied, according to School Board Chairman Barnard Joy. Plans for the new building will be drawn with funds advanced by the Federal Government as soon as a location is found, according to Early.

In his report to the school board on the Hume suggestion, Early called the $88,550 cost of the proposed Hume site at N. 24th and Nash sts. "excessive."

Other available sites are inadequate for school use, he said, in recommending "deferment" of the new Hume school.

His alternate suggestions, taken under advisement by the school board, were:

1. Use of the present Hume School as a primary school only.

2. Transportation of some Dolly Madison pupils by bus to other schools in the 1950-51 school year to make room for elementary pupils from the Arna Valley and Shirley Homes areas. Many of the latter attend Nellie Custis Elementary School.

3. Construction of a one-million-dollar junior high by fall of 1951. At that time all Dolly Madison students would be transferred there, and Madison converted to complete elementary use.

Madison Incomplete

Early said Madison, which lacks a cafeteria, auditorium, home economics and shop equipment, is not "a completed junor high unit." Moreover, its 5½-acre site is too small for a junior high athletic program, he said.

Cost of converting it to an elementary school would probably be under $10,000, he said. This would allow bulk of the $400,000 budgeted for the new Hume School to be spent on the new junior high.

Additional funds probably would be available as Arlington's share of proposed State grants to localities for school construction, Early said.

Hume School P-TA President Larry M. Kennison commented yesterday on Early's proposal: "Frankly, we're a little disappointed, but we are certainly willing to give the matter complete thought as to the best possible solution to the problem."

Dolly Madison P-TA head, Vernon P. Robonett, told Early: "Your thinking ties right in with ours and we're entirely in accord."

Club Cancels Tea Invitation, First Lady Cancels Acceptance

"By mutual consent, the invitation and the acceptance were both withdrawn."

That's the answer to the question of why Mrs. Truman isn't going to have tea January 16 at the University Women's Club, Inc., according to Mrs. Leslie Whitten, chairman of the club's hospitality committee.

Mrs. Whitten said that when the acceptance was announced and published in the papers there was "an unexpected avalanche of publicity" and the club felt Mrs. Truman might be embarrassed by it. The "publicity" revolved around the fact that the club is composed of a group of former members of the American Association of University Women, Washington Branch, who quit that organization when its national convention ruled it must accept Negro members qualified to join.

Mrs. Whitten explained last night that Mrs. Truman "is our first concern; we wouldn't want to embarrass her. Of course, we're all disappointed not to have her."

She stressed the point that the club didn't just "withdraw" the tea invitation but that the White House was "given the opportunity" to withdraw the acceptance at the same time. This was a graciously" done by Mrs. Truman's social secretary, Mrs. Edith B. Helm, Mrs. Whitten said.

Foxhunting Set Back A Week by Foxy Fox

Peapack-Gladstone, N. J., Jan. 7 (U.P.).—Yoicks, what a foxhunt!

The fox was so crafty he got 25 of the hounds lost, he exhausted 16 horses and riders, four others had to be toted home in a van, he caused peril to human life and limb by weaving in and out of highway traffic, and he finally escaped after a 7½-hour chase.

Today a valuable dog named "Fighter," owned by Mrs. Charles Scribner, jr., of the book-publishing family, still was missing in the Somerset County hills, and all foxhunting was called off for at least a week.

Twenty members of the Essex Foxhunt Club gathered on the Scribner estate in the hills of central New Jersey on Thursday. For the first three hours, all went well and two foxes were grounded. Then a third was raised.

From the Scribner estate the hunt stretched out across Route 28, through the village of North Branch Station, across Route 29 and into Centerville. Fox, hounds and hunt swept across the highways, over hedgerows and through the fields.

That fox was so wise he was seen by motorists dodging in and out of traffic so that the hounds would lose the scent.

After two and a half hours, the hounds disappeared in full cry over the hills. Most of the hunters called it a day.

Four were left—Mrs. Scribner; her guest, Miss Diana Bowling of Greenwich, Conn.; William Chadwell and James Kelly, the whipper-in. At dusk they came on the hounds dragging slowly back. Vans were summoned to take the horses, dogs and hunters back.

"That was the runningest fox I ever chased," said Chadwell. "The hunt covered 22 miles, the longest distance ever covered in a chase during the 14 years I have hunted. The animals are so exhausted that all appointments of the club are canceled for a week."

CED Proposes Tax Cut

times, tax receipts would be lower, deficit spending would ensue, and the consequent effect would be inflationary, expanding economic activity.

The budget proposed by the CED for fiscal 1951 would just about balance, with no surplus for bond retirement, if unemployment stays the same next year as this. This, the CED argues, is as it should be. One should not seek a surplus when there is as much as 6 percent of the labor force unemployed.

And even if economic conditions grow worse, and unemployment increases beyond the present figure, the CED would still recommend the same budget. Even though it would result in a deficit, its effect would be to stimulate, not further to repress, economic activity.

The report declares that the national tax policy needs a thorough overhaul and that taxes are presently so high that they seriously impede economic growth.

But, the report says, it is impossible now to effect such a big revamping and reduction. Necessary Federal expenditures are too great.

Will End Inequities

Nevertheless, the report argues, some of the worst inequities should be corrected, especially those which seem to have the worst repressive effect on economic activity, and which are the most unjust. There is room for some of this correction in the possibility of the 2¼-billion-dollar tax reduction that arises from the CED's proposed program.

It recommends five reforms that it feels would have only negligible effect in reducing tax revenue. They are:

1. Ending the exemption of Federal taxation for future issues of State and local bonds.

2. Permitting a carry-forward of business losses for a five-year period, for purpose of computing taxes on profits.

3. A more reasonable and liberal application, mostly for psychological reasons, of the penalty provision applicable against the withholding of accumulated profits.

4. Substitution of the so-called "notch rate," of a 53 percent tax on corporate profits between $25,000 and $50,000, by a sliding scale rate.

5. Clearer and more reasonable administration of the present policy on charging off (depreciating) capital assets for tax purposes.

Other Tax Changes

The CED recommends two more tax changes which would result in reduction of tax revenue:

1. Reduction of the wartime-imposed excise taxes, so that they would yield about one billion dollars less than at present. These taxes, on transportation, amusements, furs, jewelry, luggage and cosmetics are seen as unfair and that on transportation in particular as regressive and repressive to the economy.

The CED said all of the excise taxes could not be ended now, but it did not indicate which should be reduced, or by how much, to effect the one-billion-dollar reduction.

2. Reduction of the present double taxation on business profits. At present the company pays a corporate tax on its profits, and the stockholder then pays an income tax on the dividends he receives. Elimination of this double taxing would encourage risk-taking and enterprise, the report declares.

Here is the CED's calculation of how a reduction in fiscal 1951 of 6.7 billion dollars below present Federal spending levels should be achieved.

The sum of 2.8-billion-dollar reduction is virtually assured, since it is the figure, not recurring in fiscal 1951, of the 1950 refunds to veterans of their overpayment of GI insurance premiums.

Another 1.3-billion-dollar reduction would come about in a more or less automatic fashion if the high employment assumption turns out to be a reality. For in that event, that is the amount by which current unemployment compensation payments and veterans' readjustment expenses would fall.

The remainder of the savings that CED counts on would come about if the Administration makes certain recommended cuts that the CED feels are desirable. Some of these are:

1. Reduction of Marshall Plan aid and relief payments to Germany by about 1.6 million dollars below present levels. This appears to be a cut about 300 million dollars deeper than the Administration is likely to propose.

2. Reduction of the postal deficit by 500 million dollars, presumably by better administration and raising certain rates—doubtless those on second-class postage.

3. Reduction of the Federal National Mortgage Association ("Fanny May") purchases of veterans' mortgages by 650 million dollars. This would be done by charging a higher interest rate on the mortgages, so that banks would hold them, rather than sell them to FNMA.

4. Reduction of 300 million dollars from national defense expenditures and another 200 to 400 million dollars, through savings and more efficiency, administration of other Federal activities.

This adds up to more than a 6.7 billion dollars reduction, but the CED figures that the Government will have to pay out about 300 million dollars more in fiscal 1951 than in fiscal 1950, mostly for old-age benefits. Further, CED adds a figure of 500 million dollars more for unanticipated and emergency increases in expenses.

'Cash Consolidated'

The entire CED calculations and recommendations were framed within the concept of the "cash-consolidated" budget. This method, a CED favorite, is designed to show the impact on the economy of yearly Federal income and spending.

It differs principally from the Government's own "administrative" budget in that it takes into account the current income and outgo of trust accounts, such as social security, and it eliminates financial transactions between different agencies of the Government.

The program that the CED recommends, taking into account its assumptions, and using the cash-consolidated basis, would give for fiscal 1951 an expenditure rate of about 40 billion dollars, and a revenue of about 45.3 billion dollars before the proposed reduction of taxation.

Translating to the terms of the administrative budget — the one Mr. Truman will use tomorrow when he sends his estimates to Congress—the expenditures would be 39.7 billion dollars (Mr. Truman has been reported as recommending expenditures of something more than 42 billion dollars) and the revenues 41.3 billion dollars. Then if the taxes were reduced as the CED recommends, the administrative budget would show a deficit.

But this, the CED argues, is more formal than real. The "deficit" would arise in intragovernmental transactions—mostly in the accumulation of bonds in the social security trust. The amount of bonded indebtedness held by the public would be reduced. In other words, there would still be a real surplus.

5-Billion-Dollar Deficit

Translating again for the present fiscal year, where the administrative budget shows an estimated deficit of 5.5 billion dollars, the CED's cash-consolidated budget shows a deficit of about five billion dollars. Had there been the "high employment" conditions in fiscal 1950, of 2,500,000 unemployed instead of 3,500,000,the cash-consolidated budget deficit would have been about 2.5 billion dollars, the CED estimates, and the administrative budget deficit three billion dollars.

The report was the product of a special subcommittee on monetary and fiscal policy of the CED's Research and Policy Committee.

The special group operated under the chairmanship of Banker J. Cameron Thomson, president of the Northwest Bancorporation, Minneapolis.

Other members are; John D. Biggers, president, Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Co.; S. Bayard Colgate, chairman of the board, Colgate-Palmolive-Peet Co.; Carlyle Fraser, president, Genuine Parts Co.; Philip L. Graham, president and publisher, The Washington Post; Ernest Kanzler, chairman of the board, Universal C.I.T. Credit Corp.; Fred Lazarus, jr., president, Federated Department Stores, Inc.; Beardsley Ruml, New York business economist; and Joseph Spang, jr., president, Gillette Safety Razor Co.

Convulsions Hit 2 In Court for Theft

Two men charged with wine theft yesterday suffered convulsions almost simultaneously as they awaited arraignment in Municipal Court.

One defendant, Norman Smith, 27, of 1332 15th st. nw, slumped to the floor in a coma, his body trembling. Within seconds, his co-defendant, Oscar R. Neale, 47, of 2721 Sherman av. nw., was similarly seized.

Both men recovered after receiving first aid from a court nurse. The arraignment was continued by Armond Scott until January 10.

statute (to control criminals fleeing across State lines).

Next month's conference will be the first coordinated drive in history against the tygoons who rule an empire partly inherited from the tycoon of the '20s and partly derived from the goons of that era. But unlike the mobsters of prohibition days, they operate a little outside the law, a little inside the law and generally alongside the law.

Out of the meeting may come recommendations for new Federal laws, aimed to overcome the helplessness of the honest mayor or Governor who finds he is battling criminals who operate across State lines but who personally stay out of reach of local law-enforcement officials.

McGrath, in calling the crime conference, said the meeting will discuss "What should and can be done to strengthen further our powers in the field of crime detection and enforcement."

"Unlimited" in Scope

The Attorney General told The Washington Post the forthcoming crime conference would be "unlimited" in scope. Another Justice official familiar with the agenda plans, now being worked out in detail, said the Justice Department, in effect, is saying to State and local officials:

"Come and tell us about your problems and we'll work out a way to meet them."

That McGrath will hear plenty about these problems and about suggested action is apparent from the list of four groups he has invited to attend. They are:

1. The American Municipal Association, representing some 10,000 American communities, which has been vigorously campaigning for Federal help to smash the rackets and for just such a crime conference as the one now called.

2. The United Conference of Mayors, whose head is energetic Mayor Quigg Newton, jr., of Denver, and whose two immediate past presidents are Mayors Delesseps Morrison of New Orleans and Fletcher Bowron of Los Angeles, both of whom have been vigorous opponents of the tygoons.

3. The National Association of Attorneys General, an organization of the 48 top State legal officers, which a few months ago at its convention unanimously called on McGrath, the FBI and the Federal Communications Commission for cooperation with the States to smash organized gambling.

4. The National Institute of Municipal Law Officers, a group of city and county attorneys, including the District of Columbia's Corporation Counsel Vernon West. This group heretofore has concerned itself with civil law cooperation with the Federal Government.

Kefauver Watching

The crime conference, which will bring five delegates from each of the four groups to Washington, also will be closely watched by Senator Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.), who only last week introduced a resolution for a Senate investigation of interstate crime and racketeering.

Kefauver said yesterday he had talked with McGrath about the crime conference and had been assured of the utmost cooperation.

"We're both going to work in the same direction," Kefauver said. "I'm very happy he's calling this conference. He will let me have all the results and I will be watching it very closely."

McGrath's letter to the heads of the four organizations said that since becoming Attorney General last summer he had "given much thought to the ever-present problems of the effective enforcement of the criminal laws.

"It has become readily apparent to me that many of the problems faced by our national Government in fighting crime are similar to those dealt with by you on a local level."

Loopholes for Criminals

McGrath pointed out that under the American constitutional system of divided Federal and state authority over crime "circulating criminals have, from time to time, found loopholes enabling them to evade the law with impunity."

He cited the situation in the late 1920's and the early 1930's when "organized crime capitalized on the jurisdictional limitations of individual States and localities." He was referring to the racketeers, the Al Capones, of the prohibition era.

McGrath recalled that the 1934 conference called by Attorney General Homer Cummings led to "closer cooperation" among Federal, State and local investigative officials "the results of which have been tremendous.

More Wage Boosts For Federal Employes Discouraged by Murray

The door was slammed shut yesterday on any new drive for a fifth-round wage boost for Federal workers.

Chairman Murray of the House Postoffice and Civil Service Committee issued a public statement in which he called on employe leaders not to request or urge the Congress for a new round of pay raises.

Due to the financial condition of the country, Murray said, a fifth-round salary increase for Federal workers is neither warranted or justified if there is no further increase in the cost of living.

The chairman issued the statement on his own. It's no secret, however, that his stand is supported by the Administration and by scores of his colleagues in Congress. Several general pay raise bills can be expected to be introduced in Congress, but a hearing on them is unlikely this year unless the cost of living turns upward sharply.

Murray said he believed that Congress had been "fair and considerate" in granting most Federal workers four pay boosts since 1945. Most Government salaries, he added, compare favorably with those paid in private industry. He also pointed out that Congress, in the past few years, had liberalized the Civil Service Retirement Act and had indorsed other employe reforms.

Up to now, no major employe group is actively supporting a new pay raise bill. AFL's important Government Employe Council has instructed its legislative committee to make a study of the salary problem and to recommend how much of an increase, if any, the AFL employe groups will support.

The council has gone on record for a number of "fringe" benefits such as reclassification of postal salaries, credit toward promotions for the time served in the armed forces by veterans, 26 days' annual and 15 days' sick leave for all Federal workers, a cash allowance for all employes who are required to wear uniforms, and true time and a half pay for all overtime work.

CENSUS JOBS: A full explanation of how people are to be selected for Census jobs was demanded yesterday by Representative Ed Rees, ranking Republican member of the House Postoffice and Civil Service Committee.

Rees, in his letter to Acting Census Director Philip Hauser, said it was his belief that veterans should be given preference for the 150,000 or more jobs even if most of them are exempted from Civil Service. He wrote:

"The Veterans Preference Act of 1944 should not be by-passed in favor of a spoils system which recognizes only a political party to which an applicant belongs."

JOBS: The Rural Electrification Administration has a number of openings for people with technical training and experience in the telephone field. The Agriculture agency recently was directed by Congress to finance phone systems in the rural areas.

Jobs are open both here and in the field for those qualified in design, construction, and business operation of phone systems in rural areas. REA has no jobs for installers, operators, and so forth, since it merely finances the systems. It doesn't build, own, or operate them. Accountants qualified to appraise existing phone companies also are needed.

Meantime, REA is expanding its rural power loan program. On it, the agency has openings for electrical engineers with experience in design and operation of distribution and transmission lines for both steam and diesel plants.

Starting salaries will range from $3800 to $4000 annually. Send standard Government application forms to: Personnel Division, REA, Agriculture Department, in this city.

GSA: The General Service Administration has begun a commendable project—to help Federal agencies to get rid of records they no longer need.

The project also could lead to GSA being given jurisdiction over most Government records.

For example, some thought has been given to the transfer to GSA of the big Army and Navy record centers. The major Army record center is in St. Louis. The Navy has five centers. The Veterans' Administration is in the process of building a major record center in Philadelphia. Internal Revenue has one in Kansas City.

GSA would get all of these records and more too if plans go through that have been discussed. GSA estimates that 20 million cubic feet of records already are in existence and they are accumulating at the rate of a million cubic feet a year. It costs 27 millions a year merely to house the records and millions more to maintain them.

MEETINGS: The new 1951 budget will be discussed by the American Society for Public Administration at a meeting Wednesday at 8 p. m. in the international conference room, 1778 Pennsylvania ave. nw.

Speakers will be: Representative George H. Mahon (D., Tex.) Assistant Budget Director Fred Lawton, and Frank Weitzel of the Budget Bureau. . . . The Federal Club will hold a dinner meeting Tuesday at 6 p. m. at the Willard. R. G. Beers of the Veterans' Administration, will speak.

Communism Talk Subject

Dr. Edward E. Richardson, president of the Society of Philosophical Inquiry of Washington, will speak on "The Philosophy of Communism" at a meeting of the society in Room 43, National Museum, 10th st. and Constitution ave. nw., at 5 p. m. Tuesday.

Freak Accident

Man Killed, Youth Hurt On Highway

One man was killed, apparently instantly, and a youth injured last night in a freak accident on the Washington-Baltimore blvd., two miles north of Laurel, according to Maryland State police.

A truck operated by Clarence E. Gray, sr., 43, of Philadelphia, Pa., struck and killed Gilbert Stevenson, 50, a pedestrian, also of Philadelphia, police said. Gray's son, Clarence E. Gray, jr., 15, climbed down from the truck to aid the victim.

As he did, police said, an auto driven by Charles E. Young, 20, of Baltimore, struck the truck and knocked it forward, striking the boy. He was taken to University Hospital, Baltimore, suffering a fractured leg.

In the District a girl was injured when the auto in which she was a passenger collided with another, police said. She is Beatrce Prillman, 21, of 2926 10th st. nw., who was taken to Gallinger Hospital suffering a possible fractured hip and face cuts.

Police said she was a passenger in the auto of Tolly B. Spriggs, a Howard University student, of 1028 7th st. ne., when it collided with one driven by Garnett B. Radebaugh, 28, of 3252 Queenstown dr., Mt. Rainier, Md. Neither driver was injured.

A coroner's inquest will take place at 11:30 a. m. Tuesday into the death of Wallace Jones, jr., 32, of the Dunbar Hotel. He was the sixty-third District traffic fatality of 1949 when on November 14, he was crushed to death after being thrown from a car, according to police. Driver of the car was Dan Wadsworth Lee, 25, of 1426 12th st. ne., when it collided with a tractor-trailer truck driven by William C. Sloop, 25, of Wilkesboro, N. C.

The crash occurred at 11th st., and Maryland ave. sw. Lee was charged with manslaughter after the accident, in which he and two others were injured. He recently emerged from a hospital and faces hearing on January 18, in Municipal Court.

Though no date has been set, an inquest will be held this week into the abortion death of 19-year-old Mrs. Nina Cogar Campbell, Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald, District coroner, said yesterday.

The girl, whose brutally beaten body was found at 4 p. m., Thursday in an apartment at 1321 Fairmount st. nw., died as result of the abortion, according to a coroner's autopsy.

Ralph Willard Myers, 44, a window-shade salesman, of Arlington, will be offered a chance to testify in his own behalf at the inquest, but indications yesterday were that he will not. He is charged with an abortion that caused death and held under $20,000 bond set by U. S. Commissioner C. S. Lawrence.

Captain Jeremiah Flaherty, head of the police homicide squad, said yesterday that investigation of the case is still in progress, but that no statements of witnesses were taken.

After a conference with Myers at the District jail yesterday, James J. Laughlin, veteran criminal attorney here, announced he will defend Myers and confirmed that Myers will not testify at the inquest.

Laughlin charged that other evidence, not yet revealed, exists in the case and that police are "covering up someone," when they attempt to put full blame in the case on Myers.

The attorney said Myers never touched Mrs. Campbell, though the two discussed "her desire" to have an abortion. Laughlin will move, after the inquest, to have Myers released on bond, he said.

Arlington Police Seize Trio in Acme Store Break

Three men, who police said were caught in the act of breaking into an Acme Store at 1746 Le hwy., Arlington, have been charged with housebreaking, pending trial on Monday.

The three, spotted inside the grocery store about 10:30 p. m. Friday night by Officers B. E. Keyes and Creighton Marshall, were: Charles Williams, 28, 433 s. Columbus st., Alexandria; Charles Matthews, 29, 15 5th st. ne., and James Williams, 21, of 1434 Simms dr. sw.

Police said they had removed a quantity of cigarettes to the rear of the store when arrested.

Narcotic and Liquor Charges Follow Double-Barreled Raid

In a double raid early yesterday, police vice and narcotic squads entered a "two-department" house at 620 S st. nw., and made arrests on both narcotics and liquor charges.

Lieut. Roy Blick of the vice squad said his men received a tip a month ago that liquor was being sold on the first floor of the place. An undercover man entered, he said, made "buys," and obtained information marijuna and heroin were sold on the second floor.

The vice squad conferred with the narcotic squad, and deferred a planned liquor raid. Narcotic squad men said the same undercover man finally obtained admission to the second floor and bought what purported to be marijuana "sticks," or cigarettes.

Catnip Hoax

On analysis, narcotics squad men said, these proved to contain catnip, and not marijuana. They said an ounce of catnip, costing 75 cents, will "load" 100 cigarettes. These purported marijuana cigarettes, the narcotics detectives said, sold for 70 cents each.

The undercover man went back and complained, the narcotics squad men said, and then was sold real marijuana cigarettes, 36 of them for $15 in marked money, and a "cap" of heroin, for $2, in marked money.

Police then moved in. They arrested Robert C. Taylor, 27, said to be the renter of the entire house, on the second floor. They said they found marijuana and heroin, and the marked money on him. He was arraigned yesterday before United States Commissioner C. S. Lawrence, on charges of violating the marijuana law and two narcotics laws. He waived preliminary hearing and was held for grand jury action under $1500 bond.

Whisky Sales

As the narcotics men wen to the second floor, Lieut. Blick's men moved in on the first floor. There, they arrested George A. Winsmore, 51, on seven counts of keeping, and six counts of selling whisky without a license.

He pleaded guilty to the charges yesterday before Judge Milton Kronheim in Municipal Court. The case was continued to January 21 and bond set at $1000.

In the earlier raid, Friday night, vice squad men arrested Henry Jones Anderson, 28, and Edward B. Harris, 26, at 1414 8th st. nw., and charged them with keeping and selling whisky without a license. In Municipal Court yesterday, they pleaded innocent and asked a jury trial. This was scheduled for February 8, and bond was set at $500 each.

Alexandria Annexation Plan Stirs Lively Row; 'Pros' on One Side of Line, 'Antis' on Other

By Robert P. Jordan
Post Reporter

Alexandria's infant plan to annex a 7½-square mile chunk of Fairfax County west of the city's present border has already stirred up a lively dispute, with the pros and cons split by the boundary line between the two jurisdictions.

Those who live on the Alexandria side of the line are generally for it, City Councilman Albert A. Smoot reporting that "everybody thinks we're going exactly the right way."

On the Fairfax side of the boundary, the "antis" apparently have it, with the opposition particularly vehement among the 3500 living in the area proposed for annexation. From his listening post in his tiny community grocery store, one resident says just about everyone is emphatically against the proposal because of a fear of skyrocketing taxes.

The annexation plan is Alexandria's remedy for the city's growing pains, Smoot and his city council-appointed annexation committee claim. The city's estimated 75,000 residents now are confined to 7.33 square miles Only some 300 acres therein remain undeveloped.

The remedy is hardly a painless one from the Fairfax County viewpoint. G. Wallace Carper, chairman of the county board of supervisors, promises a stiff court fight to keep the property, largely undeveloped but assessed at $17,500,000, on the map of the county. The supervisors "are going to do all we can to protect the interests of our citizens," Carper said.

The issue has been joined but it is still far from a decision, because many law-imposed steps must be taken before the annexation becomes fact or is vetoed.

Among the steps are these:

A physical survey of the area which is now underway; passage of an ordinance by City Council asserting its intent to annex and describing the desired territory, and filing of the annexation suit.

This will transpire within a month, according to Smoot. The suit will ask that the land be annexed to Alexandria as of midnight, December 31, 1950.

Judge Paul Brown, of Fairfax and Alexandria Circuit Courts, will receive the suit. He will refer it to the Virginia Court of Appeals. That court will name Judge Brown, a judge of an adjoining circuit, and a judge of a distant circuit, to sit as a tribunal in the proceedings.

The tribunal, by law, must "consider the best interests of the county and city, and the best interests, services to be rendered and needs of the area proposed to be annexed, and the best interests of the remaining portion of the county." So the law reads.

The tribunal can give Alexandria all it asks, as little as the court decides, or no land at all.

In determining the "necessity for or expediency of annexation," the tribunal need pay no attention to the sentiment of residents of the area, V. Floyd Williams, Alexandria city attorney, says.

"A voice vote," he says, "is not binding or even evidential as far as the court is concerned."

This is a sad state of affairs to William J. Cleveland, 65, superintendent at the Virginia Episcopal Theological Seminary and a lifelong resident of the area Alexandria wants for lebensraum.

"I think the people should have a vote on whether they go or whether they don't go," Cleveland contends. "I'm opposed to it." He then added: "We have more say out here than people in the city."

"Here" is a block of rolling, scrub-pine covered, sparsely settled, largely-undeveloped land.

In the southwest corner of the area is the tiny community of Lincolnia. Clayton B. Donaldson, jr., 28, operates a grocery there. It serves as a listening post, too, Donaldson says.

"I have a feeling we've got to pay for a lot of things Alexandria will have that we won't have—and that we don't need—sewers, city water, utilities, trash removal, etc.," he says.

Generally, Donaldson says people fear taxes will skyrocket under Alexandria government.

Not so, rebuts Councilman Smoot. Virginia law, he says, provides that the tax rate cannot be raised for five years effective date of an annexation.

Smoot also compares the present city levy—$2.75 for each $100 assessed valuation—against the $3.19 Fairfax rate. He argues, too, that the county sanitary bond issue about to be floated will bring a tax increase, as will the proposed $10,500,000 county school bond issue if it goes through.

Fairfax residents counter by citing the Alexandria tax on automobiles—20 cents for each 100 pounds. They mentioned the need for school construction, particularly in the neighborhood of the huge Shirley-Duke apartment project on Duke st. extended.

Presently there are but two elementary schools in the entire area, Lee-Jackson and Lincolnia. Alexandria will buy these if its suit is successful.

Insiders predict the county will fight the suit, but not to a standstill. Supervisors' Chairman Carper admits the city's plan to seek land west of its boundaries rather than south is "as reasonable as could be expected."

Senate Labor Unit Joins Hospital Probe

By Thomas Winship
Post Reporter

A special three-man subcommittee of the Senate Labor and Welfare Committee has been created to investigate conditions at St. Elizabeths Hospital, it was learned last night.

This action makes the announced inquiry into the city's mental institutions and homes for aged a two-committee undertaking.

The Senate District Committee has already begun preliminary study of the District-operated institutions at the request of its chairman, Senator Matthew M. Neely (D., W. Va.).

Meanwhile, officials in charge of the local mental hospital and homes for the aged yesterday unanimously praised the proposed inquiry as a means of turning the congressional spotlight on needed capital improvements they have urged repeatedly.

Any irregularities that might be turned up, they insisted, are nothing that more personnel and brick and mortar cannot cure.

Neely has indicated he particularly wants to look into reports that several hundred elderly persons who are not mentally ill have been committed to mental institutions here.

The District probe closely follows a voluminous study of Virginia State mental institutions by a staff of experts whose conclusions described them as "disgraceful" and "shocking."

Improprieties Charged

In Neely's own State of West Virginia, Dell White, a member of the State Board of Control, recently charged that many aged men and women there are being falsely labeled insane, and that State institutions have become "dumping grounds" for old people.

The two-way probe was decided upon Friday, Thomas explained, because St. Elizabeths, is a Federal institution which comes under Labor Committee jurisdiction. He named Neely to head the subcommittee which will include Senators Claude Pepper (D., Fla.) and Forrest C. Donnell (R., Mo.).

Heads of institutions here, slated to be investigated, gave The Washington Post this summary of their respective problems and how they propose they could be cured:

Dr. Winfred Overholser, superintendent of St. Elizabeths, denied that the hospital had become a "dumping ground" for the aged any more than any other State mental hospital in the country.

Contrary to belief in some quarters, he said commitment procedure at St. Elizabeths is too strict rather than too lenient.

"No one," he said, "has been railroaded into the institution. But we do have perhaps 200 elderly persons who have improved to the point where they could be transferred to a nursing home where their care would be less costly."

The best concrete answer to the overload of elderly persons at St. Elizabeths, he said, would be more facilities at the Home for the Aged and Infirm at Blue Plains.

Raymond Clapp, deputy director of the District Welfare Department, spelled out the situation at Blue Plains this way:

"The whole program there is designed for those who are limited physically or mentally. We have a very great overcrowding problem in bed-ridden persons, and we always have a waiting list for admittance to the 140-bed infirmary."

18 Positions Requested

He pointed to provisions in the new budget for the coming fiscal year which requests $750,000 to begin the work of doubling the capacity of the Blue Plains infirmary. Welfare officials have urged expansion there the past seven years. The new budget estimates also call for 18 new staff positions at the Home for the Aged.

At the District Training School for Feeble Minded there is presently no overcrowding, Clapp said. He added, however, that expanded facilities there would not relieve St. Elizabeths because there are "hardly any feeble minded people in the training school who are also emotionally unbalanced."

Same Bullet Hits 2; Pistol Wielder Held

Charged with wounding two persons with the same bullet, Glother Davis, 42, of 407 New York av. nw., was held in $2000 bond for the grand jury in Municipal Court yesterday on charges of assault with a dangerous weapon.

According to police, Davis pulled a pistol as he walked into the apartment of Elizabeth Beaver, of 465 New York av. nw., who, he asserted, was his former wife.

The woman, police said, tried to wrest the gun from him. It fired and a bullet crashed through her right hand and struck her male friend, James McCoy, 28, of 505 L st. nw, in the right leg. Neither person was seriously hurt.

'Painless' Budget Spurned, Alexandria Councilman Says

A formula for balancing Alexandria's 1950 budget without a proposed utility tax has been ignored by a city council majority, a minority member charged yesterday.

Leroy S. Bendheim, bitter foe of the 5 percent utility levy favored by four of the seven council members, said he had been voted down in executive session on two separate proposals which would have balanced the budget without increasing taxes for the "average" resident.

Both proposals were based on a reduction of $254,000 in expenditures and an increase of $70,000 in revenue, Bendheim said. One, however, would have included a 2-cent-per-pack cigarette tax suggested by Councilman Marshall J. Beverley, who also opposes the utility tax.

Bendheim said he arrived at the slash in general expenditures by methodically reducing or eliminating "unnecessary items." He said his proposed reductions would have no effect on salary proposals, nor would they bring any major changes in operating expenditures of any individual department.

In anticipating revenues at $70,000 higher than the budget provides, Bendheim said he was convinced real estate taxes alone would bring $60,000 more than the 1950 estimate. Other items he said he believed to be underestimated are city auto licenses, by $4000; Virginia liquor profits, $3000, and "miscellaneous revenues," $3000.

Besides reducing general operating costs, Bendheim proposed that a $136,000 expenditure for capital outlay be transferred from the budget and included in public bonds, to be floated later in the year.

On both proposals, Bendheim said, he had the support of Beverley and Roy Bragg. Lined up against them was Mayor Franklin B. Backus and Councilmen Albert A. Smoot, James M. Duncan, jr., and R. Samuel Luckett.

The majority faction has favored the utility tax from the outset, but agreed this week to reduce it to 5 percent from an originally proposed 10 percent. The tax would apply to the bills of all users of gas, water, electricity and telephones.

Virginia Legislature To Face School Plans

Richmond, Va., Jan. 7 (AP).—The Virginia General Assembly convenes Wednesday to consider a docket which includes major problems in education, finance and elections laws. The lawmakers are slated to take up immediately an elections contest to determine who occupies Russell County's seat in the House of Delegates.

This, in turn, has brought up a move for repeal of the absent voters law. State Senator Harry C. Stuart of Elk Garden has announced he will introduce a bill to accomplish this.

Poll Tax Perplexing

On a broader plane is the question of what is to be done about the poll tax. This problem will bounce back to the Legislature as a result of the defeat last November of the Campbell suffrage amendments, which was a big package including poll tax repeal, along with numerous other changes in elections laws.

Several approaches to poll tax reform already have been suggested by members of the General Assembly. Delegate Bentley Hite, Montgomery County Republican, this week reiterated a GOP proposal for an early convention to deal with the poll tax and make over "drastic changes" in Virginia's basic election laws.

Hite thus joined orders of his party who do not want a convention limited to the poll tax question, a course advocated by some Democratic members to the legislature.

The Russell County contest is to be disposed of first. Mrs. Turner A. Gilmer, Democratic nominee for the House, has challenged the election of John W. Fletcher, independent, on a charge of irregularities in the mail ballot vote.

Education Question Old

The education question is nothing new for the Legislature. Mainly, it involves two things—increase in teachers' salaries and methods of aiding the localities in financing school construction.

Many phases of the school problem were dealt with in the recent report by the commission on State and local revenues and expenditures. Ninety-five bills now are being prepared to carry out the commission's 52 recommendtaions in these and in other fields.

The commission recommended changes in State income tax allowances to correspond to those in the Federal law. This would cut personal exemptions from $1000 to $600 but would increase the allowance for dependents and make provision for other deductions. It result in some increases and some decreases for individual taxpayers and would boost State revenue by an estimated one million dollars a year.

Opposition is expected by some observers as certain to develop to some of these proposals. The commission recommended no new taxes.

Campaign Promises Recalled

Although Governor-elect Battle has remained mum on what he will say in his message to the Legislature, his campaign for Governor involved promises to seek quick action to appropriate 30 million dollars from State funds to distribute as "gifts" to help the localities finance school construction.

A major recommendation in another field has been handed the Legislature by the Virginia Advisory Legislative Council. The council proposed a complete revision of the State's juvenile courts law to reorganize and reinforce the present system with probation, detention and psychiatric services.

Legislation also has been recommended in two other widely divergent fields: Natural gas and oil resources and industrial loan associations. A study commission made three major recommendations aimed at regulation, protection and development of Virginia's natural gas and oil resources.

Two potentially controversial items which also have been added for the legislature's consideration are public welfare budgeting and rent control.

Seek Rent Control End

The Virginia Real Estate Association's board of directors has announced it will seek introduction of a bill to abolish all rent controls in the State.

In addition to these controversial proposals there have been some indications that efforts may be made to trim State taxes imposed in 1948 and State Senator Frank S. Richeson, of Richmond, has declared he will intoduce a bill to allow deduction of Federal income tax payments in State income tax returns.

Also headed for consideration by the Assembly is a bill by Delegate W. Carl Spencer, of Norfolk, to legalize whisky "by the drink."

Segregation Bills Planned

Bills repealing the state's transportation segregation laws will be introduced by Delegate Armistead L. Booths, of Alexandria.

Boothe also plans to sponsor a measure creating a Virginia civil rights commission to study economc, educational and other phases of racial relations problems.

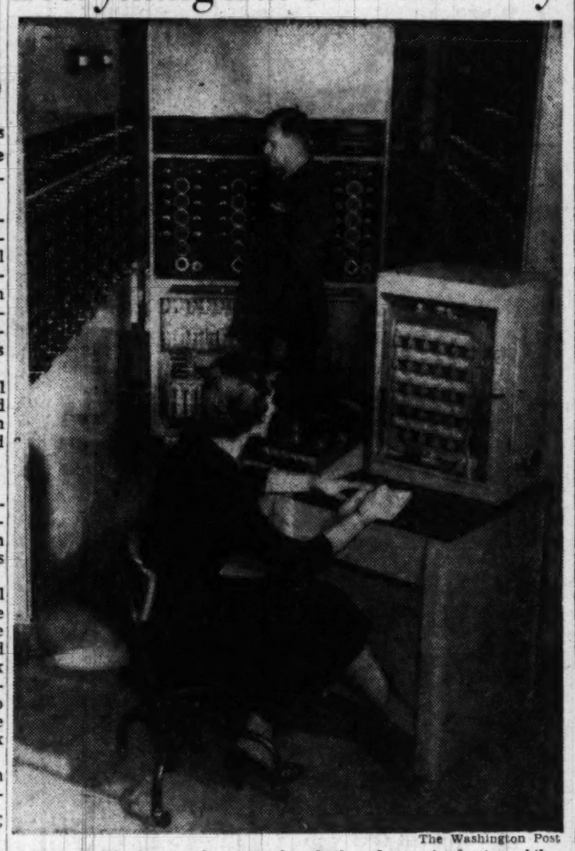
'Brain' in Georgetown Does Everything But Your Laundry



The Washington Post

Reed Research, Inc., a bit of the future in historic Georgetown, yesterday held its coming-out party—an invitation affair to show its hitherto-sceret wares.

The private corporation, at 1048 Potomac st. nw., tackles scientfic problems, mostly for the armed services.

Yesterday, thanks to declassification, it was able to exhibit its $150,000 Simulator, an electronic brain capable of 200,000 calculations a second. In 10 minutes the room-size machine can provide an answer it would take a physicist-mathematician two years to compute.

The Simulator was built under contract for the Army Air Force, which has problems in thermodynamics, magnetic fields and other subjects.

On display also was the corporation's answer to a Navy problem—how to keep water from entering at the shaft of a ship's propellor. Reed Research Corporation solved it with a seal of mercury, the heavy but fluid metal.

The Army had a problem, too, and the scientists found how to clean out gasoline cans for behind-the-front refills. They built a special flushing machine which hoses out the five-gallon cans or 50-gallon drums, and strains off all but the gasoline.

Among other developments were a wire cloth weaving machine, an ultrasonic generator which conceivably could be used to wash dishes by inaudible soundwaves, and a magnesium plating process which takes the lightweight metal and coats it with a zinc plate, and after that, practically any other metal facing.

Officials of the company, which was started by Stanley Foster Reed, naval architect, in March, 1945, said last night they plan to make the semiopen house an annual event. Five hundred guests attended yesterday.

Judge Albert B. Bryan of the United States Dstrict Court in Alexandria ruled last December that "certainly" no discrimination "has been proved by a preponderance of the evidence."

Star Producer

Brady, Stage Figure Fifty Years, Is Dead

WILLIAM BRADY
Final curtain

New York, Jan. 7 (AP).—William A. Brady, 86, a top showman for half a century, died yesterday but—at his own request—his death didn't keep the show from going on.

Brady, one of the theater's outstanding products, manager of many leading stars and sport figures, had been ill for some time with a heart ailment.

Last night his grief-stricken wife, 70-year-old film and stage veteran Grace George, went on as usual in her starring role in "The Velvet Glove," a new play at the Booth Theater.

Again tonight Miss George played her part as usual.

Stanley Gilkie, general manager of the play, tonight said:

"She did not wish to stop any performance, in conformance with his wishes."

Gilkie said that a week ago Brady told him:

"Whatever happens, I don't want anything to interfere with her playing."

A solemn requiem mass will be sung at 11 a. m. (EST) Monday at St. Malachy's Church. He will be buried Monday at Sleepy Hollow Cemetery, North Tarrytown, N. Y.

Brady, who managed many stars, had suffered a heart ailment for many years, an associate of Brady's personal physician said.

Brady produced a stream of popular plays since 1888. He had produced 250 plays in New York.

He managed such stars as Douglas Fairbanks, Laurette Taylor, Tallulah Bankhead, his daughter Alice Brady, and Grace George, his second wife.

His granddaughter, Barbara Brady, also is in "The Velvet Glove" in which Brady's widow shares top billing with Walter Hampden.

Brady confessed he was a born gambler—said he made and lost 50 fortunes in as many years in show business.

He told of cutting cards at $15,000 a cut with Arnold Rothstein, Broadway gambling prince.

During a tempestuous life he was actor, sports promoter, playwright and producer.

He was born in San Francisco June 19, 1863.

His father, a newspaperman, became estranged from Brady's mother and took the child to New York at the age of three.

His father was killed in a fall under the Bowery "El" and young Brady, in his 'teens, got a job as a steward in the New York Press Club.

In 1882 he returned to his native city and began a stage career as an actor.

Brady was president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry from 1915 to 1920.

Built Two Theaters

He built William A. Brady's Playhouse here in 1910 and the Forty-eighth Street Theater in 1912.

Brady first was married to Marie Rene, now dead. Their daughter, Alice, died in 1939.

Brady married Grace George in 1899. Their son, William A.Brady, jr., is dead.

Brady managed Jim Corbett when "Gentleman Jim" dethroned John L. Sullivan as heavyweight champion at New Orleans September 7, 1892.

Seven years later he was managing Jeffries when the latter won the heavyweight title from the conqueror of Corbett—Bob Fitzsimmons.

For years Brady fought for legalization of Sunday performances—and the fight was won in 1935 when the New York City aldermen authorized Sunday shows.

Scientists Up Against Stone Wall—Studying

"Something there is that doesn't love a wall,
That sends the frozen-ground-swell under it. . . ."
(From Robert Frost's "Mending Wall.")

There's something, too, that doesn't like the stones that go into a wall, and the National Bureau of Standards here has begun a study.

To determine the weathering properties of stone, it has erected an experimental wall faced with more than 2000 specimens of stone from 48 States and 16 foreign countries.

The test wall is 13 feet 10 inches high and three inches short of 38 feet long.

The bureau scientists aren't concerned with the plaint of the New England farmers who "on a day we meet to walk the line, and set the wall between us once again." What the scientists want to learn is what stones hold their color, which hold off the elements the longest, and what effects modern mortars have on building stones.

It's admittedly a long-term study, but some of the results may be noted after several months.

For comparative purposes, the scientists have stored samples of the catalogued stones.

Some stones, notably marble, grow larger under weathering. To determine the effect on masonry as a whole, reference plugs were placed along five courses and periodic measurements will be made.

Construction was done by contract with Louis Perna & Sons, Inc., Washington stone contractors, under the direction of William Amoroso, stonemason.

'It took about six weeks, while a wall of that size generally can be done in a week," Amoroso said. "We had to play with it, but it wasn't much fun."

"There is something about a scientific wall that Amoroso doesn't like," he agreed.

WASHINGTON: SUNDAY, JANUARY 8, 1950

'This I Remember'—Eleanor Roosevelt's Story

The Washington Post herewith begins the serialization of "This I Remember," the nonfiction best-seller in which Eleanor Roosevelt tells the story of Franklin D. Roosevelt's career, from 1924 to his death in 1945. The first two chapters follow, and succeeding installments will be printed daily in The Washington Post through February 4.

Chapter I

By Eleanor Roosevelt

AS I begin this book, it seems to me an infinitely more difficult task than the previous volume of my autobiography. In the first place, it can no longer be just my autobiography. Naturally most people will be interested primarily in what I may have to tell about my husband.

In the first volume of my autobiography, I tried to give a picture of the times in which I grew up; of myself and incidentally of the people around me. In this book, I feel the times need not be discussed by me. Over and over again, the period will be written about by historians, yet perhaps I shall be able to give some impressions which may help in the understanding of the stream of history during these complicated years.

Many books will be written about my husband in the next few years and about the people with whom he worked. Therefore, what I have to say, if it is to contribute anything more to the understanding of his life and character and objectives, must be about him as an individual.

I do not claim that I can be entirely objective about him, but there are some things which I know that I feel sure nobody else can know. Although no human being ever completely knows another human being, one cannot live for many years with a person without learning something about him. Other people may know certain sides of Franklin's character or particular facets of his personality better than I; but if I can contribute what I have learned and what I believe to be true, I may help to fill in the true picture for future historians.

Each From His View

THE few books that have already been written about Franklin show quite plainly that everyone writes from his own view, and that a man like my husband, who was particularly susceptible to people, took color from whomever he was with, giving to each one something different of himself.

Because he disliked being disagreeable, he made an effort to give each person who came in contact with him the feeling that he understood what his particular interest was.

Frances Perkins, in her book, has given a wonderful picture of him that in many respects no one else could possibly have given. Yet even in her book, I think, there are little inaccuracies and misinterpretations arising from the fact that each of us brings to any contact with another person our own personality and our own interests and prejudices and beliefs.

Often people have told me that they were misled by Franklin. When they have not said it in so many words, I have sometimes felt that he had left them, after an interview, with the idea that he was in entire agreement with them. I would know quite well, however, that he was not, and that they would be very much surprised when later his actions were in complete contradiction to what they had thought his attitude would be.

This arose not only from his dislike of being disagreeable, but from the interest that he always had in somebody else's point of view and his willingness to listen to it. If he thought it was well expressed and clear, he nodded his head and frequently said: "I see," or something of the sort. This did not mean that he was convinced of the truth of the arguments, or even that he entirely understood them, but only that he appreciated the way in which the arguments were presented.

A General Outlook

THERE is another fact which few people realize, namely, that the President of the United States gets more all-around information than most people who come to see him, though any one of them may know his own subject better than the President does.

The President, however, has to have a general outlook which takes in over-all considerations; whereas other people must think primarily about their own ideas, plans and responsibilities for the specific thing they hope to accomplish.

This circumstance puts on a President the responsibility of gathering all possible points of view, hearing very often conflicting ideas on a given subject, and of then making a final decision. This is one of the most difficult things a President has to do.

In addition, the fact that he can never have a personal loyalty greater than his loyalty to the Nation sometimes makes it seem as though he were disloyal to his friends; but a man holding the office of President of the United States must think first of what he considers the greatest good of the people and the country.

Only Slightly Influenced

AS TIME went on, I think Franklin often felt that he must save himself from arguments, and that his obligation to the people who came to see him was discharged when he took the time out of a very strenuous program to sit and listen. I know he always gave thought to what people said, but I have never known any one less really influenced by others.

He asked for advice from a great many people. He simply wanted points of view which might help him to form his final decision if he had not reached one and which he sifted through his own knowledge and feelings. But once he reached a decision, people flattered themselves if they thought they ever changed it.

Franklin often used me to get the reflection of other people's thinking because he knew I made it a point to see and talk with a variety of people. I did not have to go on lecture trips, or go to see projects in different parts of the country, but my husband knew that I would not be satisfied to be merely an official hostess.

He often suggested I interest myself in certain things, such as the homestead projects. He knew that life would be very uninteresting to me if I did not feel I was accomplishing something.

Therefore, for my sake, he was glad when he found that for a few weeks in spring and fall, I could and did go on paid lecture trips. I knew that I would not plan such trips unless I had definite commitments and had signed formal contracts, but when it was an obligation, I arranged my time so that it was possible. The trips took me to many places throughout the country to which I might never have gone otherwise.

Baited for Opinions

NATURALLY these lecture trips gave me more money for things I wished to do than my husband could afford. At the same time I felt that Franklin used whatever I brought back to him in the way of observations and information as a check against the many official reports which he received.

Very often, when some matter was being fought out with his advisers, he would bring up the question at dinner and bait me into giving an opinion by stating as his own a point of view with which he knew I would disagree. He would give me all the arguments which had been advanced to him and I would try vociferously and with heat to refute them.

I remember one occasion, though the subject of the argument has now been forgotten, when I became extremely vehement and irritated. My husband smiled indulgently and repeated all the things that everyone else had said to him.

The next day he asked Miss Thompson if I could have tea in the West Hall in the White House for him and Mr. Robert Bingham, who was then our Ambassador to London, about to return to his post. I dutifully served them with tea, fully expecting to sit and listen in silence to a discussion of questions with which I probably would not be in agreement.

Instead, to my complete surprise, I heard Franklin telling Ambassador Bingham to act, not according to the arguments that he had given me, but according to the arguments that I had given him! Without giving me a glance or the satisfaction of batting an eyelash in my direction, he calmly stated as his own the policies and beliefs he had argued against the night before!

To this day I have no idea whether he simply used me as a sounding board, as he so often did, with the idea of getting the reaction of the person on the outside, or whether my argument had been needed to fortify his own decision and clarify his own mind.

They Went In—and Listened

AFTER Franklin became President, many people told me how much they disagreed with him and how they were going into an interview prepared to tell him so in no uncertain terms. They went in, but if I had a chance to see them as they came out, they usually looked at me blandly and behaved as though they never had disagreed with him.

Only now and then was some one honest enough to say he was not able to state his own point of view. I think this was due partly to the effect of Franklin's personality and partly to their awe of the office itself.

Franklin had a way, when he did not want to hear somebody's point of view, of telling stories and talking about something quite different. Everyone who worked with him had to learn how to handle this technique of his if they were not to find that the questions they wanted to ask, or the opinion they wanted to state, never got into words because Franklin talked so steadily and so interestingly that they forgot what they had come to say!

Of all his intimates only a few, I think, ever really understood how it was that people sometimes thought he was in agreement with them when he was not or he had given his consent when really he had never contemplated giving it.

I may have been able to help some people to this understanding. Louis Howe, I think, always understood this trait in Franklin, and Frank Walker, Edward J. Flynn, Henry Morgenthau, jr., and Mr. Bernard Baruch came to know it well. With none of these men were their own interests ever paramount. Their interest was in my husband and in the work to be done and they could be very objective even when their own work was involved.

Undue Credit

I WAS often supposed to be a great influence on my husband politically. Over and over again people wrote and said that I was responsible for his actions and even for some of his appointments. Frances Perkins' appointment to the Cabinet is a case in point.

As a matter of fact, I never suggested her. She had worked with Franklin in New York State and was his choice but I was delighted when he named her and glad that he felt a woman should be recognized.

There were times when a list of names suggested for an appointment would come out and there would be no woman's name on the list. Then I might go to my husband and say that I was very weary of reminding him to remind the members of his Cabinet and his advisers that women were in existence, that they were a factor in the life of the Nation and increasingly important politically.

He always smiled and said: "Of course, I thought a woman's name had been put on the list. Have someone call up and say I feel a woman should be recognized." As a result, I was sometimes asked for suggestions and then would give two or three names. Sometimes they were considered and sometimes they were not.

No Mandates

THE political influence which was attributed to me was nil where my husband was concerned, largely because I never made the slightest effort to do what I knew I could not do. If I felt strongly about anything I told Franklin, since he could do things and I could not, but he did not always feel as I did.

I have since discovered, of course, that a great many Government people to whom I referred letters felt that they were a mandate and required prompt attention. Evidently they thought that if what I suggested was not done, I would complain to my husband.

As a matter of fact, all I ever expected was that they would be interested in accomplishing the things that should be accomplished, since government is supposed to serve the good of the people.

I thought that every Government official investigated complaints and tried to correct injustices gladly. I realize now that this was a rather naive idea, for it is apparent from what people have told me that it was often only fear of White House displeasure that set the wheels in motion.

This was not true of many departments, but I suppose it is only natural that some of the older departments where a number of Civil Service people feel entrenched should not want to bother with new activities. Both Mr. Woodin and Mr. Morgenthau must have made great changes in the old Treasury Department management. The standards set, particularly after Mr. Morgenthau became Secretary, must have seemed alarming to some old types of Civil Service officials!

Patriotic Compulsion

I FELT very critical of civil service officials at times. When they have been in a department for a long while, they can make any change difficult.

Nevertheless, I think it is true that there are an astonishing number of people who want to serve their country and are willing to accept the modest security and low pay of a Civil Service employe simply because they feel they are performing a patriotic service.

Consciously, as I have said, I never tried to exert any political influence on my husband or on anyone in the Government. However, one cannot live in a political atmosphere and study the actions of a good politician, which my husband was, without absorbing some rudimentary facts about politics.

Though Franklin always said I was far too impatient ever to be good politician and though my sense of timing is nowhere near so trustworthy as his, I have grown more impatient with age and perhaps learned from my husband that no leader can be too far ahead of his followers.

Also I think my observations of conditions and of the feelings of the average people within our country are probably fairly trustworthy still.

Chapter II

WHEN I look back on what we spent in our early married days, I appreciate the changes in the cost of living in the last 40 years. I go into these details because I think they will be of interest to the young people of today.

My husband and I agreed that we would put an equal amount into the house account, and we lived easily and comfortably if not luxuriously on $600 a month. He paid, in addition, the rent and the children's schooling and doctors' bills. I dressed the children and myself, and we went shares on presents to our relatives and friends. We shared some charities and gave individually to others when we were able to do so. In later years our charities were our individual responsibilities except in rare cases when we gave jointly.

These arrangements seemed to me entirely fair and equitable, and it was not until after two children were added to our family that we changed the amount we put into the house account. Even then I paid my full share and so had less to spend in other ways.

As our household expenses increased over the years, Franklin assumed more responsibility for running the home and gave all the children modest allowances up to the time they left school. Before they were old enough to be on an allowance, I bought their clothes, as I said, and I always bought my own; however, Franklin thought that once they had an allowance they should buy their own clothes in order to learn how to manage money. Now and then I had to rescue them by giving gifts of underwear, shirts and socks. The habit has persisted, and they tease me about it now.

Franklin had a very strong feeling that our sons should be allowed to make their own mistakes and their own decisions.

I think his attitude came very largely

New Breed of Refugees Contains Peril to Peace

By Frank Gervasi
Post Reporter

FRANKFURT.—The refugee problem is with us again in a new and virulent form, and what Europe needs at least as much as Marshall Plan money or Atlantic Pact arms is a genius to solve it.

The people involved, this time, are neither Jews nor those whom the postwar world has known as displaced persons. They are those who have fled westward from Russian-occupied or Sovietized Europe. They can be counted in the millions.

Most Jewish victims of the Nazi-Fascism have found homes and jobs in Israel or in such other countries as would accept them. The majority of DPs, those imported by the Germans from conquered countries as wartime slave laborers for Reich farms and factories, have been resettled by the International Refugee Organization.

In any event, neither Jews nor DPs ever represented a danger to peace and the democratic reconstruction of Europe. But this new category of refugees most certainly does. It is composed of irridentists and avengers, of haters and nationalists, preponderantly German.

It includes Germans from Silesia, the Sudetenland, the Baltic States, the Balkans and other areas where the physical and ethnic frontiers have been redrawn in favor of the Soviet Union or its satellites. Among them are many clearly identifiable as political and religious refugees, people who could not live happily and prosperously under communism. Most of these, however, are not Germans but Czechs, Poles, Latvians, Estonians, Romanians, Bulgars, Hungarians and Yugoslavs.

The bulk of the Germans are unregenerated Nazis whom the Russians were glad to be rid of. Many probably visited upon others the treatment they are now receiving, or at least condoned it.

In their ragged ranks, also, there undoubtedly are individuals who were allowed to "escape" for ultimate possible use as agents, spies or saboteurs.

But who is to sort them all out? What of those who are neither Nazi nor Communist, but plain decent folk in search of freedom, unable, until now, to make their way westward? How are these to be resettled when the IRO cannot legally regard them as refugees, having become such after December 21, 1945?

And how are the others—the Germans—to be reabsorbed in the social, political and economic structure of a Free Europe? No one, so far, has seriously tackled the problems and the dangers which this new mass of jostled humanity represents. Registration centers have been set up and relief is given. But the measures thus far employed are mere palliatives.

The people involved are individuals who have left behind farms, stores, factories and homes. They want their lands and properties back. They have been done injustice and they seethe with hatred. They are the potential followers of the potential Hitlers of tomorrow.

The mass of embittered Germans oozing westward like a lava flow and potentially as destructive, is concentrated in the West German Federal Republic. They complicate the Allies' already difficult task of democratizing Germany. The resurgent nationalism you have been reading so much about has its most enthusiastic followers among their numbers.

No one knows exactly how many there are in the western zone. Reliable estimates place the total at a minimum of eight million, substantially more than a fifth of the West German population of 45 million.

Frau Von Der Decken, the elderly, kindly chief of the Central Refugee Office in west Berlin—she is a woman not given to exaggeration—believed that the total in West Germany might be as high as 10 million and would reach 14 million before long.

"They drift into West Germany at the rate of 2000 a day," she explained. "We get a minimum of 500 daily here and, lately, they have been coming at the rate of 1000 a day.

"They come in the hope of being able to move on into West Germany. But they cannot. They may not use the Allied trains. The only way they can safely cross the Russian area just west of us is to fly, which they did during the airlift. Now they must use the commercial airline and very few can afford the fare. So here they stay—trapped."

West Berlin's 24 refugee camps are jammed with upwards of 40,000 who need everything imaginable—bedding, clothing, shoes, food, medicine—and represent a serious drain on the deficient economy of the city. Most of the 60-million-mark monthly subsidy paid to the west Berlin Magistrat by the Bonn government goes to maintain the refugees and the unemployed whose ranks they swell. Ultimately the cost is borne by the American taxpayer, who is really subsidizing the reconstruction of Germany and the democratization program.

Still Pan-Germans

THE problem, however, is less material and economic than it is political and spiritual. Those refugees with whom I talked still believe that Hitler's only mistake was to have lost the war. Hitler was right, to their way of thinking, in partitioning Czechoslovakia, taking Austria, eliminating the Polish Corridor and in otherwise spreading himself about the map in pursuit of Pan-Germany.

Their talk chills the blood. It is not their tales of terror, persecution, slave labor in the uranium mines and escape across guarded frontiers that frightens. Those stories are old stuff now; their impact has been dulled by repetition.

What gives the listener cold, galloping goose pimples is their war talk. They want war, see conflict between West and East as inevitable, commend it as the "only solution" to the "Russian problem." They see war as the means of regaining lost properties, positions and prestige and of reuniting scattered families.

Those who have been squeezed out of eastern Europe by the Soviets are among the few people who actually would be willing to fight again. A gangling youth of 21 told me that he escaped from Saxony only "to join the new Wehrmacht in West Germany that is going to fight Russia." A Silesian with a receding chin recounted his adventures in escaping from a Polish labor camp, talked longingly about his confiscated farm and said:

"Ach, but it is not for long. We shall go back, you and I, and take from them what they have taken from us. Nein?"

He looked blank when I said, angrily, "Not if I can help it."

A Spiritual Delousing

MORE than food, clothing and such, these Germans need spiritual delousing. They require reeducation, and a good place to begin would be right in the camps where they are now concentrated, before they are let loose in the economically and politically weak body of the new "democratic" Germany which we are trying to build in the ruins of the Nazi Reich.

Few of these are good candidates for a democratic life merely because they are anti-Communist.

The bona fide non-German victims of Communist political and religious persecution present an entirely different problem.

The last half hour in a DP camp for 844 displaced persons (as distinguished from the new type of refugees who are swarming westward from Soviet Europe). This group, ranging from 8-month-old tots to 80-year-old ancients, is waiting to board trucks of the International Refugee Organization for the first leg of a journey to new homes in the United States. Most of the original DPs now have been resettled by the IRO

It is one which, perhaps, only the American Congress could solve. Because they became refugees after the December, 1945, deadline set by the American Congress, they are not eligible for resettlement by the IRO. Reconsideration of the law, according to experts dealing with the problem on the spot, is necessary.

Many of these non-German refugees have trickled down through Austria and Italy to the Allied zone of the Free Territory of Trieste. Some 45,000 are gathered there, swelling the population of that tiny area—it has already risen to 300,000—and complicating its economic problems.

A substantial number are Italians by blood and Yugoslavs by citizenship, caught in the No-Man's-Land between the old Italian frontiers and the new ones drawn in Yugoslavia's favor by the peace treaty. Left there to grouse about lost homes and properties, jobless and hungry, they will inevitably join forces with the chauvinists with which Trieste has always abounded.

We are arming Italy now. Perhaps we should beware that "Trieste!" shall not again become a war cry as it was in 1914.

Dollar Blinds Hongkong to Red Menace

By Walter Bosshard

Walter Bosshard has, for 25 years, been the correspondent of the Neue Zurcher Zeitung. He covered China and Japan before the Second World War, represented his newspaper in the United States from 1942 to 1945, and has since been in the Far East. He is the author of "A Look at Four Continents" (1947) and "Mongolia" (1949).

HONGKONG.—No other city in the East offers greater political, social and economic contrasts today than Hongkong, the British colony in Chinese waters, the open window toward the West, as some people lately like to call this rocky island.

The development of this important trade center occurred during the reign of Queen Victoria, and the spirit of that great era still dominates the daily life of the small ruling class of white government officials, bankers, traders, even youngsters fresh out from England.

Socially, the 2½ million inhabitants are divided into four classes. The government officials, those who sign their letters with "Your obedient servant," consider themselves the cream of the society. Privately, this is contested by the merchant princes, who occupy the stately mansions in the suburbs and around the Peak—the steep hill above the harbor—where they entertain lavishly in true Victorian style.

While the "obedient servants" sit on their dignity and complain about the poor salary the government is paying them, the bankers and traders seldom miss an opportunity to remind them that without the commercial initiative and bold spirit of the businessmen, government employes would soon have to pack and go home, where the Socialist government would hardly install them in such magnificent apartments, with Chinese cooks and boys to manage the household and an amah to look after the children.

Some Are Tolerated

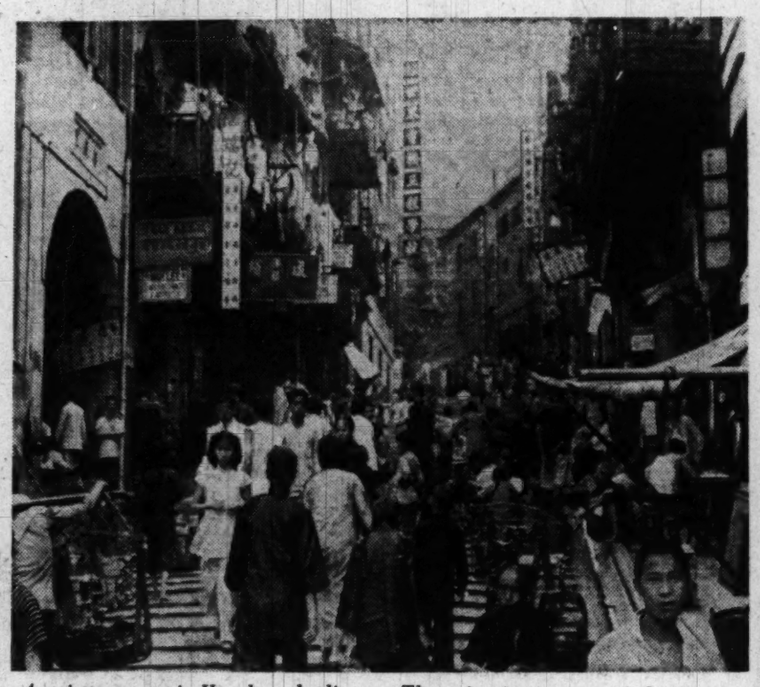
ANY AMERICAN or continental European is looked upon as an inferior, and there is an unwritten caste system dating back to Victoria. The exclusive Hongkong Club sets the standard.

Any greenhorn from England is eligible for full membership. Non-British merchants are tolerated and permitted to share the expenses, but without the right to vote. Managers of large hotels or heads of department stores, however, are barred. Serving food to other people or selling goods over the counter is considered an occupation below the dignity of a gentleman. No merit acquired during a lifetime in this colony would open those imposing doors to such outsiders.

The real outcasts among the white population are the Portuguese from nearby Macao and the numerous descendants of the early settlers in China who may have a drop of Chinese blood in their veins. However rich and clever they may be, they cannot enter the higher spheres of colonial society.

They are permitted to contribute to the many welfare funds, and if they have influential friends they may receive an invitation to a garden party at Government House once a year. To aspire to anything beyond that would be regarded as proof of bad taste of a lack of respect for tradition.

Thus the white population of Hongkong continues to live in seclusion from the rest of the world. Although the Communist outposts are only 30 miles away, there is hardly any interest in the great political changes in China. The flourishing trade of recent months is reflected in an uninterrupted flow of cocktail and dinner parties and the quantity of expensive liquor consumed at every occasion.



A stairstep street in Hongkong leading from the waterfront toward "the Peak" where the rich white merchants live.

Thronging it are some of the 98 percent of the colony's population which comprises the lowest "caste"

It is amazing to see how the minds and habits of young Britishers return to the days of Victoria the moment they land in this colony, and how few of the tycoons have read or even heard of Mao Tze-tung's "New Democracy" which is sweeping China.

A Native Aristocracy

THE CHINESE population of over two million is also divided into two classes: the millionaires, and the hard-working men in the street. The former acquired their wealth as "compradores" in British banks or commercial firms and may even hold some British title or decoration, provided they have contributed heavily to some institution which glorifies the British rule of Hongkong.

Lately, numerous Chinese from Shanghai and Canton have transferred their capital here from the mainland to escape heavy taxation and confiscation by the Communists. With this idle money came speculation on a large scale, and the price of land and "key money" for houses, offices and apartments jumped sky high.

There are few contacts between the two white classes and the rich Chinese beyond entertaining for business reasons. And neither the white society nor the yellow millionaires bother much about the refugees arriving from the mainland. Such problems are left to the Hongkong government, which copes with these emergency cases as well as any poorly prepared authority could do.

Nearly 98 percent of the population of Hongkong comprises the Chinese laboring class, shopkeepers, salesmen, wharf coolies, house servants and minor employes of the government and public utility, shipping and commercial companies. Most of them live in crowded apartments or single rooms, frequently using their working places as sleeping quarters.

With the ever increasing cost of living and the constant example of luxury and waste given them by the white classes, the ground is well prepared for the activity of Communist agents, whose number is estimated at well over 10,000. But the British close their eyes to the danger. They believe that the treatment of labor by the Communist authorities in Shanghai and Canton had a sobering effect on the local working class.

The fact of the matter is that the Communist agents already dominate most of Hongkong's labor unions and that strikes and boycotts can be organized whenever it suits the Red government in Peking. Several unions have lately been clamoring for wage increases to meet the higher cost of living. Such demands fall on deaf ears.

Counting on Boom

POLITICAL reasons may prevent the Communist government from ordering any drastic step for the time being. Big business here was all in favor of immediate recognition and if would be unwise to create trouble before diplomatic relations are actually established. But the threat exists.

The one-track-minded Britisher in this colony sees only the dollar he expects to earn by trading with the Communists. There are people here who expect an unprecedented boom during the next two years. Others play with the rather naive hope that the Communists would never dare to attack British territory.

Undoubtedly, from the military point of view the island and its leased territories are better prepared than ever before to meet an invader. But to believe that Hongkong does not figure in the political program of the Chinese Communist Party is pure wishful thinking.

Geographically, Hongkong belongs to China. The Kuomintang had its eye on this prosperous trade center and so have the Communists.

The Hongkong government is undoubtedly aware of the danger, but it has to yield to the pressure of big business, which intends to leave the fight against communism in Asia to the United States.

East and West Both Nurse Fallacies

By Edwin D. Gritz
Post Reporter

WHAT the people of Russia and the United States think of each other is giving diplomats of both countries a bad time.

For one thing, political planning is becoming increasingly difficult as a result of mutual misconceptions.

In Russia's case, persistent propaganda has tried to make the Soviet citizen believe that Americans are profiteering gangsters whose women, too, are lustful and degenerate. The Russians have been told:

"In order that the future robot-soldier may strangle women, slaughter children and drop atom bombs on civilian towns without shuddering, he must be compelled today to pattern himself on the mores of the cannibal. . ."

First-hand accounts of Soviet life reveal, however, that this domestic propaganda is backfiring. Most urban Russians between the ages of 25 and 50 were found to be skeptical about the villainy of foreigners.

Learn by Radio

HAVING lost the revolutionary fanaticism of youth, yet not old enough to be plainly reactionary, this age group has proved to be surprisingly analytical. Many, of course, learned a great deal about the West while in the armed forces—and many are learning more from travelers and radio broadcasts despite Moscow's frowns.

A few who dare express themselves have indicated a great admiration for the Americans and a deep desire to get along—"if only the United States would stop trying to undermine Russia." Thus, while all else may be suspect, even the most sophisticated are sold on the kind of peace and patriotism purveyed by the Kremlin.

But, mindful of the skeptics, the Kremlin is now gathering facts and figures about industrial and sociological progress to stimulate greater support from all citizens. Although the West is still vilified at every opportunity, most of this elementary stuff is beamed to the impressionable rural areas.

Of course, when skepticism takes on the hue of revisionism or deviation, communism's two cardinal sins, the state police move in.

Tied to Patriotism

AS FOR the United States, State Department policy makers have to work against the handicap of popular misconceptions about the Soviet people as well as that of outright reaction.

Many Americans expect the Soviet state to crumble sooner or later. Only Stalin's death or some such event is needed to topple this house of cards, they think.

The USSR is a far more durable structure than is generally believed. The Kremlin has made it the symbol of salvation for Russia's masses, whose only memories are of hunger and strife.

And Stalin, like Lenin, like anyone else who comes along—he is "nas vohzd," our leader. In Stalin or any other established leader, the Russians see the physical expression of their country, beloved with almost mystical fervor, whether administered by Communists or czars.

Equally misunderstood is the Soviet conception of truth. There can only be one political party because there is only one truth. Compromise, therefore, is inadmissible and the Western idea of loyal opposition is impossible.

Thus, should there be a minority view on any question, special instruction is brought to bear until unanimity is achieved—and "truth" thereby established. These instructors are called, literally, "propagandists."

The nearest Russian equivalent of the American word "propagandist" is "propovednik," meaning a preacher of unsavory views. And, like the "propagandist," there is nothing repugnant about the Russian "agitator." To the Russians, he, too, is a skilled political scientist.

As for Soviet morals today, the Soviet man or woman must be viewed in the light of such a seriously meant analysis as this:

"Their high spiritual culture makes them exacting in love. Our Soviet persons cannot love out of mere natural attraction.

"He wants his beloved to be worthy of love, to possess the best qualities of the Soviet person. And the best qualities are exhibited above all in labor for the welfare of the country.

"Respect for labor has become one of the foundations of Communist morality, hence love is not separated from labor, but is blended with it.

"Labor is the cement in the foundation, the source of the close comradely ties between lovers."

Frequently overlooked, too, is the fact that Russia is moved by a deep messianic urge to create a new world for history's downtrodden. At the moment, the Soviet Union is practically unanimous in the belief that communism is finally forming a new universal culture which will save mankind from destruction.

To the Western mind, this is as difficult to grasp as is the Russian's age-old view of "zavtra," tomorrow—there's always tomorrow should today fall short of expectations.

All this seems to add up to the conclusion that the Russian's mind and heart are as much a part of the "cold war" as money and machinery. But how to reach the Russian's mind and heart, and thus beat communism with real democracy, that's still a problem.

Farm Lobbyists Are Multiplying by Dividing

By Roscoe Fleming
Denver Newspaperman and Magazine Contributor

DENVER.—Representative Clifford Hope of Kansas, Republican farm leader, is helping to make two farm lobbyists grow where one grew before.

If his recommendations are followed, each farmers' commodity group of any size will soon have its own Washington representative, in addition to those of the general farm groups.

The wheat growers are setting the example. Several State and regional wheat growers' organizations are coalescing into a national grain growers' association under the partial guidance of a genial Coloradoan named Lloyd Case.

Case has the best of all arguments for such an organization: It will make money for farmers.

Credited in part to him is the transformation of high plains wheat growers from derided "suitcase farmers" (meaning they do not live on the farm but come out from town to do their planting and harvesting) into a powerful and respectable group able to work its will in Congress and override the Agriculture Department.

Newcomers Hit

WHEN these men first invaded the Great Plains during and after the war, with their big machines which can plow up and plant 150 acres daily of prairie sod, they were looked upon as wheat gamblers, sure to create a new dust bowl.

Last summer when the Agriculture Department proclaimed wheat acreage quotas, the quotas were set on a "historical basis." This favored established wheat areas, cut new ones sharply.

In Colorado the average cut would have been about 35 percent, and some new-rich prairie counties would have lost almost all their acreage, compared to an average national cut of about 17 percent.

Their representative ran to Washington and got Congress to write a special formula canceling most of the cut. Even then, Hope indignantly told the Colorado Grain Growers Association here, "Agriculture Department bureaucrats tried to override the will of Congress and cancel two-thirds of the gained acreage."

$50 Million Stake

COLORADO alone gained back more than a million acres in permissible wheat plantings for 1950, meaning a possible 50 million dollars in additional farm income.

Representative Hope drove the lesson home:

"Wheat growing in the United States constitutes a two billion-dollar industry. I do not know of a business that size, outside of agriculture, that does not have its own special representatives in Washington.

"The Government now definitely deals with farmers on a commodity basis. Farmers must have commodity organizations to protect their interests."

He added: "I do not mean that wheat farmers should organize into a 'pressure group.' Instead, they could render a service both to the Government and to the Agriculture Department by giving the benefit of wheat growers' views.

"Congress undoubtedly will tinker with the farm bill again next year. If grain growers have a national organization by then, they can help us write the kind of bill we all want."

Effective Pioneers

LIVESTOCK and dairy farmers have long been organized by commodity groups. They are effective and tough, as shown by the long stalemate over repeal of the margarine tax.

Farmers in most other commodity groups however, have largely left Washington representation up to the general farm organizations. Hope explained that these are now too busy with general farm matters, and too divided on matters of policy, to pay enough attention to the interests of specific commodity groups.

With the lengthening list of price-suported crops subject to quotas, the Government (either departmentally or in the Congress) can conceivably increase or lower the income of such commodity groups by many million dollars yearly. So, though you may think it impossible, there's going to be twice as thick a stand of farm lobbyists in the streets of Washington.

Giant New Bevatron Will Be Cosmic Ray 'Hose'

By Daniel Wilkes
Science Writer for the University of California

BERKELEY, CALIF.—Once such developments were viewed by most of us with singular detachment, but in the world of 1950 the construction of giant atom smashers in the United States, Britain and possibly in Russia excites more than casual public interest.

Construction progress has been reported on the two super atom smashers sponsored by the Atomic Energy Commission: The 9 million dollar, 6 billion electron volt Bevatron at the University of California Radiation Laboratory; and the 3 million dollar, 3 billion electron volt Cosmotron at the Brookhaven National Laboratory. A 1.3 billion volt machine has been under construction for some time at Birmingham, England, and most recently there were reports from the European Communist press of plans for a "Phasatron."

What is the role of such atom smashers in the development of the Atomic Age? What, if any, connection, might they have with atomic bombs or with atomic energy for industry?

Let us first lay by the heels any idea that these atom smashers are necessarily associated with the development of better atomic mousetraps, either in the form of bombs or power machines. The scientist is looking further ahead. He is interested primarily in adding to our store of fundamental knowledge about the structure of matter and the forces of nature.

The scentist knows—and the average citizen appreciates more and more—that the technological mousetraps of our industrial-electrical-atomic society are conceived in the womb of fundamental knowledge. And new, better mousetraps can only follow upon the strengthening of our foundation of fundamental knowledge, much of which may seem irrevelant upon its first discovery.

Dissecting the Nucleus

ATOM SMASHERS, by whatever name, are among the most helpful tools for investigating the invisible, puzzling world of the atomic nucleus, the structural cornerstone of all matter.

At the risk of oversimplification, we may describe an atom smasher as a glorified atomic screwdriver, which permits scientists to take the nucleus apart. How much the scientist learns from his tinkering depends upon the screwdrivers available and upon his ingenuity and intelligence in interpreting what he "sees" as the pieces of the nucleus come apart.

The new machines are the latest logical development in nuclear screwdrivers. Possessing power beyond the dreams of the atomic bombardiers of the '30s, these machines will bring physicists closer to grips with mysterious forces and elusive essences in the shadowy milieu of the nucleus.

To understand the significance of the giant new machines, it is necessary to review briefly the development of atom smashers and the uses to which they have been put.

The first atom smasher was a piece of radium, a naturally radioactive element which ejects three kinds of radiation. One of these radiations consists of alpha particles, the nuclei of helium atoms.

Using radium, Lord Rutherford, the great English physicist, performed the first atom-smashing experiment in 1919. He trained the alpha particles of radium on oxygen gas. When an alpha particle struck an oxygen nucleus, the nucleus was changed fundamentally—it was transmuted into an atom of nitrogen.

This was the first time man fundamentally altered the nature of matter. The experiment presented physicists with a new method for learning more about the structure of matter. For by slamming atomic particles into nuclei and then determining the results of the bombardments—by means of Geiger counters, cloud chambers and chemical tests—it was possible to make accurate deductions about nuclear structure.

'Sun' and Planets

WITH the aid of Rutherford's and other studies, it became possible for nuclear scientists to build a model of what an atom must look like to account for all the phenomena which were observed when particles were hurled against nuclei.

This model is the familiar planetary atom. The nucleus is conceived to be a central conglomerate, made up of basic heavy particles: Protons, with a positive charge; and neutrons, with no charge. Around this central "sun" revolve planetary electrons, of negative charge, in numbers equal to the number of protons. The number of protons determines what kind of element the atom is; electrical balance is maintained by cancellation of charge between electrons and protons.

This whole system is only about one one-hundred-millionth of a centimeter in diameter. And even this area is mostly space, for if the whole atom were enlarged to the size of the earth, the nucleus would be smaller than New York's Manhattan Island.

Physicists faced enormous complexities in trying to explain this nucleus. Consider one example. Nuclei consist of one or more protons, plus neutrons. Now, protons are positively charged. And it is axiomatic that two positively charged particles will repel each other. How is it possible for as many as 92 protons (as in the uranium nucleus) to remain in such a small space? Why do not protons in nuclei repel each other so violently as to make nuclei—matter—fall apart?

The scientists early attributed this cohesiveness of nuclei to powerful forces observed to exist within nuclei. These forces were demonstrated by the repulsive force the nucleus exerted on charged particles sent against it. The reality of these forces was most dramatically demonstrated when part of the energy of the nucleus was expended in fission. Yet the nature of nuclear forces, which are unlike any other known on earth, is still not understood.

Nature's Atom Smasher

THE efforts to "invade" the nucleus and to solve some of these problems has taken two directions, each involving atom smashing.

One way is to study cosmic rays, the ultra-high energy radiations which originate in space and rain incessantly upon the earth and the earth's atmosphere. There are two types of cosmic rays: primaries, coming from outside the earth's atmosphere and ranging in energy up to possibly 100,000 billion electron volts; and secondaries, which arise from disintegrations occurring when the primaries strike nuclei in the atmosphere. Cosmic rays are thus the result of atom smashing in nature.

One of the most intriguing phenomena of cosmic rays were secondary particles called mesons. These ephemeral particles were liberated, or created, only in cataclysmic disintegrations of nuclei, and scientists soon associated them with the binding force which holds nuclei together. It was felt that nuclear forces could be studied in some detail once mesons could be created in the laboratory.

Meanwhile, the second method of invading the nucleus has been pursued vigorously. This called for the construction of atom-smashing machines which could hurl greater quantities of particles of higher energy than could be obtained from radium.

The most successful of these for reaching high energy was the cyclotron, developed by Professor Ernest O. Lawrence of the University of California. The cyclotron is a machine in which particles in a void are whirled by electrical forces and guided by a magnetic field, until they reach high energy.

Successively larger cyclotrons were built, by means of which transmutations of all nuclei were accomplished; the new elements, neptunium, plutonium, americium and curium were discovered; and much new general atomic information was added.

Mesons Liberated

IN 1944 a Russian scientist, V. Veksler, and in 1945 a colleague of Lawrence's, Dr. E. M. McMillan, independently proposed a method for circumventing difficulties which threatened to limit cyclotron development to about 100 million electron volts.

A year later Lawrence and his colleagues had put into operation a 4000-ton synchro-cyclotron, which yielded deuterons, the nuclei of heavy hydrogen atoms, of 200 million electron volts; and alpha particles of 400 million electron volts.

This was the first accelerator capable of smashing nuclei so hard as to liberate mesons. In a given time a scientist using this machine can observe about 10 million times as many mesons as a scientist can observe on a mountain top.

The slamming of particles against nuclei at these energies duplicates only the lowest energy cosmic ray events. Yet because this can be done under conditions established by the scientists, with some of the capriciousness of nature eliminated, the results have been significant.

The meson studies in nature and in the laboratory, plus the results of knocking particles together with the giant atom smasher, have threatened to dissolve some of the bold outlines of the picture of the atom as it was known in 1945.

In that year physicists were inclined to believe that the known particles—the electrons, protons, neutrons, etc.—were ultimate, that they could not be divided. But the new information leads them to wonder if perhaps these particles may not contain structures, within which exist smaller particles or other essences of matter.

One way to try to find out is to continue studying cosmic rays. Another way is to build giant machines, to duplicate under controllable conditions cosmic ray disintegrations of much higher energy than has been possible.

Cosmic Ray Hoses

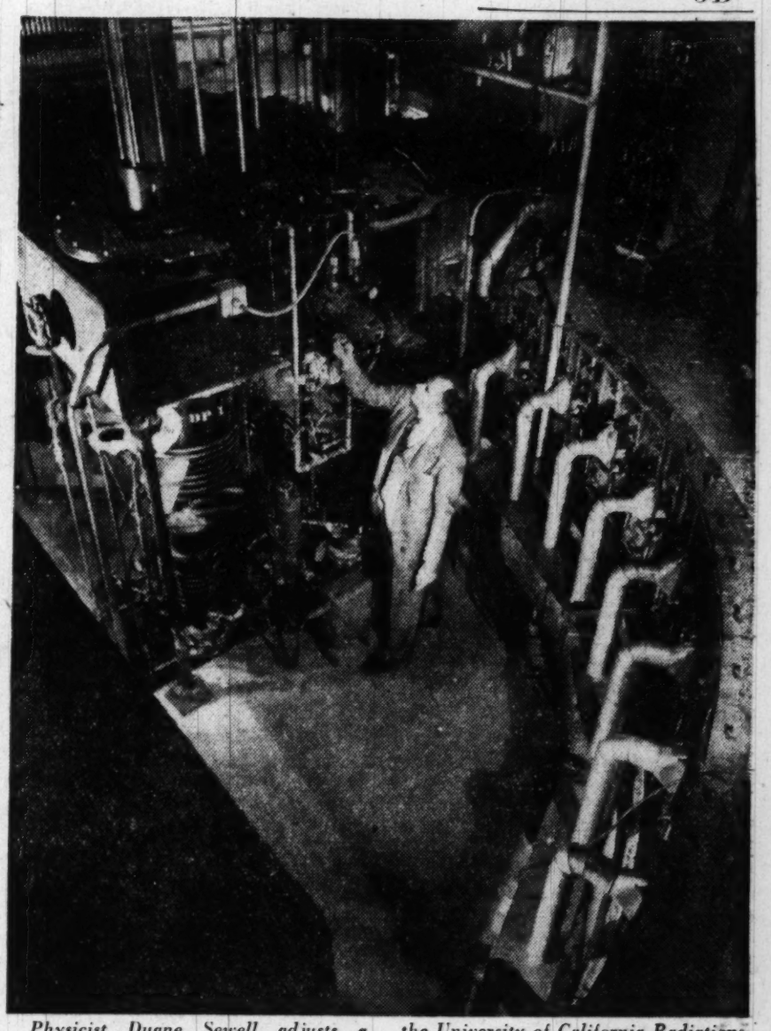
TURNING on the Bevatron and the Cosmotron will be like turning on cosmic ray hoses. Every particle of the billion volt range is a cosmic ray. The billions of protons emerging from these machines will form a beam of cosmic rays. With the Bevatron it will even be possible to create heavy particles out of energy.

When these things can be done in the laboratory, then it may be that physicists can determine more clearly the basic structures of atoms and universes.

Recently, the Radiation Laboratory at the University of California reported that a working model one-fourth the size of the Bevatron is in successful operation. This model, although it accelerates protons to only 6 million electron volts and is meant only for studying the intricate principles of Bevatron operation, is actually larger in physical dimensions than any atom smasher ever built.

The full-scale Bevatron, scheduled for completion some three or four years hence, will have a 10,000-ton magnet with a diameter of 110 feet. It will have a 400-foot-long evacuated racetrack for speeding up protons. Either a 10-million-electron-volt cyclotron or linear accelerator, either of which would have been a powerful atom smasher in the 1930s, will be used as an injector of particles.

Protons will be accelerated in bunches. In a period of about two seconds a bunch of protons will circle the chamber 4 million times, reaching a speed of 184,000 miles a second, 99 percent of the speed of light, and emerging at 6 billion electron volts. Each bunch of protons will have traveled 300,000 miles, a distance greater than that from the earth to the moon.



Physicist Duane Sewell adjusts a vacuum pump inside the magnet of the working model already in operation at the University of California Radiation Laboratory. And the model is only one fourth the size of the Bevatron

THE Bevatron, Cosmotron and the English proton synchrotron at Manchester are all similar in design, though representing different energy ranges. Information on the Russian "Phasatron" is sketchy.

Along with the announcement in the Communist press that Veksler had completed a synchrotron (several of which have been built in England and the United States), came the word that Veksler "also had the idea of a new apparatus . . . called phasatron." The term "Phasatron" probably stems from the name for the Veksler-McMillan principle, called the "theory of phase stability." If constructed, it probably would be similar in design to the giants now being built in the United States and Britain.

'Everyone Has a Theory' About the UAW Terror

By Selig Harrison
Mr. Harrison is a Detroit Newspaperman

DETROIT.—Who is behind the terror war on the CIO United Auto Workers?

Is it racketeers? Communists? Cranks? Disgruntled union politicians? Diehard management? The hate fringe?

Twenty months after the shooting of UAW President Walter Reuther, and 7 months after gunfire destroyed his brother Victor's right eye, the attempted dynamiting of union headquarters December 20 sent FBI men to the aid of stalemated Michigan police. All the authorities are still baffled.

"Everyone has a theory," says Inspector Joseph A. Krug, head of the Detroit police special investigation squad. "Frankly, they all lead up to the same stone wall." The right one leads to $239,000 in rewards.

Investigators' hopes can center only on the January 18 trial of Carl Bolton, former vice president of Ford Local 400, now serving a 10-to-15-year armed robbery sentence in Southern Michigan Prison. At Bolton's examination October 19, 1948, two former convicts testified that he had asked them to do away with Walter Reuther shortly before the April 20, 1948, shooting.

Same Circumstances

DEFENSE ATTORNEY JOSEPH LOUISELL belittles the evidence against Bolton as "not even circumstantial." The defense has in its favor not only the unsavory character of the two witnesses but also the fact that Bolton entered prison the day before Victor Reuther was shot.

Surface clews make it appear that the same man did both shootings. Walter was hit on a Tuesday evening by a 12-gauge shotgun blast fired through the kitchen window of his home. Victor was reading in his living room on a Tuesday evening when 12-gauge shotgun pellets struck him. In both cases the assailant sped away in a waiting car.

Assistant Prosecutor Joseph A. Rashid insists, however, that he has a good chance to win. "You don't put your whole case into an examination; you just show probable cause," he said. "There are a lot of details we have not disclosed and a number of points that have been strengthened by our investigations. The case has far more merit than those not close to the situation realize."

The Racket Theory

BOLTON'S trial underscores speculation that underworld characters want to retaliate for Reuther's position against racketeering in the auto plants. Bolton's local at Ford's Highland Park factory had a unique concentration of gangsters in its ranks and the most extensive racketeering connections in Detroit area plants.

Former Ford Labor Relations Chief Harry Bennett imported large numbers of parolees from Southern Michigan Prison to work under management's aegis as the union drive was stepped up in the late '30s. Later, with the big Ford organizing struggle waged by Local 600 at the River Rouge plant, Local 400 developed artificially overnight out of a union shop contract handed to the workers willingly after others took the beachhead. It required only opportunism to win union leadership, and the hoodlum element took that easy road.

Typically, racketeering in an auto plant means the numbers game, with approximately one "pickup man" to 75 workers, and the union steward's privilege of passing freely among the employes was an invaluable asset.

At Local 400, in addition to the numbers, a multi-million-dollar auto parts racket formerly flourished through the alleged collusion of individuals in lower echelons of management. Spark plugs, auto radios, fuel pumps, carburetors and other equipment continually disappeared until a successful crackdown after the war. Although Ford top brass directed the campaign, Ken Bannon, national UAW-Ford director and then local president, put the union squarely on the righteous side. Any steward caught in a racket was threatened with expulsion from membership, a bread-and-butter matter in a union shop.

Sometime Reutherite

BANNON won the local presidency in a 1946 Reutherite sweep that pushed aside Bolton and other former convicts in high posts. Bolton's political gyrations, however, placed him at other times in the Reuther camp.

Actually, Reuther's opposition to the rackets has never amounted to a crusade. He deplores acceptance of the evil by management, adding, "A guy can't run around a department doing a numbers job unless the foreman condones it, perhaps even gets a cut. You can't expect the union to clean it up alone."

Reuther's campaign to give unionism a wholesome reputation nevertheless has recurrently disrupted use of the steward structure by numbers syndicates. As one official of Chrysler Highland Park Local 490 summed it up, "They'd get along a hell of a lot better without Reuther where they want to tie their activities into locals."

Prosecutor Rashid's two star witnesses have notorious records. John F. Kolodziejeske, 45, known under six aliases, has spent his entire life in prison since the age of 17 with the exception of 22 months between offenses. For 51-year-old John Pantella, it has been one conviction after another since 1931.

They told identical stories at the examination: Bolton asked each of them to assassinate Reuther for $15,000. Both emphatically disclaimed any intention of going along with the scheme.

Few Real Clews

THERE are remarkably few tangible clews in the two shootings and the attempted dynamiting. The housewife who saw a red Ford sedan leave the Walter Reuther home didn't get the license number. Nation-wide police efforts to trace the shotgun found in the shrubbery outside Victor's house ended futilely in a southern California town. The Christmas gift-wrapped 39 sticks of dynamite could have been bought at most hardware stores.

The theory that Communists are responsible has obvious merit despite the hot denials of the Michigan Communist Party.

UAW assimilation of most of the leftwing Farm Equipment Workers and much of the United Electrical Workers has caused savage jurisdictional warfare.

Also, Reuther's leadership in the formation of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions dealt European communism a body blow. He attacked Stalin strongly in Voice of America broadcasts beamed from Germany to Soviet territory. The U. S. S. R. has good reason to want Reuther removed.

A Racial Angle

THEN there is native American fascism, which thrives in Detroit and is most virulent in opposition to UAW anti-discrimination policies. The Klan, the old Black Legion's remnants and lesser-known groups have a surprisingly large following, especially among Southern white emigres in the auto plants. Interracial social affairs in local unions and UAW intervention to lift the color ban in the American Bowling Congress constitution have aroused violent feeling.

Some theorists suspect an anti-union crackpot. Still others, including Walter Reuther, have intimated that stubborn sections of unsophisticated management might take such drastic measures.

The Detroit press has put its editorial guess on an embittered loser in internecine UAW strife. There is no question that the jockeying for power within the dominant right wing alone has been cold-blooded enough.

No fresh clews emerged from recent minor anti-UAW incidents, such as the gasoline saturation of the home of George Scopas, Cadillac Local 22 president, and threatening phone calls to the home of Ford UAW Director Bannon. Hopes for a "break" are not high at this point.

As for Walter Reuther's opinion:

"They're just trying to terrorize us into complete inactivity," he says. "Our office girls and staff members' wives are nervous. After all, they may be 100 percent for the union, but they'd like the father of their kids to come home at night. That's why it's done, to paralyze the union through fear, and antilabor, un-American elements are doing it. Well, they won't succeed."

The Gallup Poll

Federal FEPC Slightly Favored

By George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

POPULAR opinion throughout the country seems to be fairly evenly divided on how far the Federal Government should go in the matter of fair employment practices—one of the cornerstones of President Truman's controversial civil rights program.

The President has repeatedly called for Federal action in setting up a program against racial or religious discrimination in the hiring of workers.

In Nation-wide questioning of a cross-section of voters, the Institute finds that the weight of opinion is slightly in favor of some action by the Federal Government. This opinion has grown stronger since a year ago.

However, a substantial body of citizens — particularly in the South—questions whether FEPC legislation should be the province of the Federal Government at all, and claims that it is something best left to the States and local communities.

Some voters also question whether attempts to regulate employment practices by private employers are within the province of any government—whether National, State or local.

Here is the vote in the Institute's survey:

"One of President Truman's civil rights proposals concerns employment practices. How far (to what extent) do you, yourself, think the Federal Government should go in requiring employers to hire people without regard to their race, religion, color or nationality?"

All the way	34%
Part of the way	14
	48%
Take no action	41
No opinion	11

Voters questioned in Southern States showed a much more one-sided attitude, with a substantial majority against Federal action. The survey was conducted among the voting population only.

Those who believe the Government should go only part of the way expressed the view that FEPC regulations should not apply in blanket fashion to all situations.

Those opposed to any action either said that the matter is not within the province of government and should be left up to the employer, or that it is not a matter for the Federal Government but rather for the States.

Those who think the Government should go "all the way" in protecting workers against discrimination argue that if the Government does not see to it that employers are impartial, no one else will.

Atom Exchange

If the British memorandum on atomic energy means what it appears to say, the prospect for a real American-British-Canadian atomic partnership has been immensely advanced. The British, apparently, have made a substantial concession in offering to give up their own separate program to produce atomic bombs. This had been the major sticking point in the exploratory talks between the three countries. Any true partnership, of course, implies division of labor, and there would be no sense in duplicating elsewhere the immense production facilities already concentrated in this country.

What the British are asking in return is to have a stockpile of completed atomic bombs on their own soil. Whether such a stockpile actually would increase British security is questionable, but certainly it would serve as a psychological boost. It is hard to see how the United States could do less than accede to this request if the British abandoned their efforts to produce atomic weapons. Undoubtedly it would be desirable to provide for consultation before such bombs were used; but in the light of the collective defense obligation of the Atlantic Pact this requirement would be largely academic.

The real advantage of the British proposals is that it would enable the joint atomic program to use the best scientific brains of all three countries—assuming, of course, that the arrangement would be of indefinite duration and not limited to merely three years. In the largely uncharted field of atomic energy particularly, three heads are better than one and the complete interplay of ideas most certainly would add to the general knowledge. Partnership would imply not only the complete sharing of data, but also over-all assessment of existing atomic projects and assignment of scientists where they would do the most good, irrespective of nationality.

It cannot be stressed enough in this connection that the United States would stand to gain more than it gave up. The British, for example, have amassed considerable experience with the theoretical aspect of atomic weapons since the wartime collaboration languished. They also have devoted a great deal of attention to nonmilitary uses of atomic energy; atomic power, for instance, is more important in fuel-short Britain than in the United States. The Canadians have an atomic reactor said to be superior in some ways to anything in this country. Full cooperation would aid both the military potential and the nonmilitary applications in which the United States has been lagging.

The Administration has wisely decided against using the equivocal interpretations of the McMahon Act as a license to go ahead. The present talks are exploratory only, and any exchange will be presented to Congress for consummation. This is significant, for atomic partnership must represent a firm national policy instead of mere administrative decision. If Congress will look objectively at the facts, however, there can be only one answer. Complete interchange of information is the only realistic alternative to three separate and costly programs which waste the brains of all three countries. Let Congress ponder what atomic brain pooling did for all of us in the war.

Sesqui Probe

Charges and actual disclosures of irregularities in connection with the Sesquicentennial have given rise to a good deal of understandable public uneasiness about the project. In the circumstances, a thoroughgoing investigation by a qualified and wholly detached agency seems the best remedy—that is, the best means of affording the public genuine reassurance. The Federal Bureau of Investigation is, of course, just such an agency. The Attorney General's assignment of it to the situation means that the whole operation will be carefully canvassed, the accounts audited and any possible misuse of Federal funds explored.

It is the possibility of crime in connection with the funds appropriated for the Sesquicentennial by Congress that brings the situation within the FBI's jurisdiction. No illegal act has been revealed, although an attempted violation of the law in the form of a kickback arrangement has been reported. This was on the part of a minority shareholder in the Leasing Bureau, not by anyone in the direct employ of the Sesquicentennial Commission. It is vitally important, of course, that all the operations and contracts in connection with the Freedom Fair be altogether above suspicion. Happily, they are to be carried on henceforth in the open and subjected to continuing audits. The FBI's review of the past will enable the commission to start afresh free from all taint of impropriety.

KLM Pilot

It turns out that, after all, the Indonesians did not insure the bumping off of the 13 American newsmen who were killed in the crash at Bombay last July 12 of a KLM Constellation. This, you remember, was the story that was hawked about when the tragedy happened. An Indian government committee blames the dead pilot for the crash; an "error in judgment" was the "direct cause" of it.

So far as it goes, the committee's report corresponds with what our editor recently gathered on the spot. But the reports in Bombay went further. It was said that this was the Dutch pilot's first flight over Bombay; that, contrary to usual practice, he accepted the elevation given him from the airport, and that the figure was 200 feet below a safe altitude. He smashed into a hillside while circling for an opening in the storm through which to land after having been turned away from another airport. Perhaps the real truth will never be known, for there were no survivors.

What is sure is that this accident will not damage the prestige of KLM. The Dutch line has a merited reputation for safe and sound flying the world over, and is, moreover, guiltless of the ridiculous charge loosely leveled at the Indonesians.

Interstate Crime

Senator Kefauver's request for an investigation of interstate crime and racketeering by the Senate Judiciary Committee has far-reaching possibilities. Some forms of crime, especially gambling, have become big business in the United States. Criminals make a routine practice of operating across State lines or in various different States for the protection it gives them. Occasionally they become so powerful as to control local governments and to operate with immunity to the penalties prescribed by the individual States for violation of their laws. The Senate can render a great service by exposing these operations and perhaps by passing legislation to aid the States in dealing with them.

Care must be taken, of course, not to encroach upon the responsibility of the States and cities for local law enforcement. We do not think for a moment that Senator Kefauver has any idea of shifting the control of local crime to a Federal police. But he does appear to recognize that when criminal operations extend beyond the scope of the States' powers, Congress has an obligation to do something about it. Indeed, this obligation has been recognized and Federal controls over interstate crime have been gradually extended over the last half century. As early as 1903 the Supreme Court upheld a congressional prohibition on the carriage of lottery tickets from one State to another. Since then the commerce power has been successfully used to prevent the transportation across State lines of impure foods, stolen automobiles, kidnaped persons, and women for purposes of prostitution. In the field of social and economic regulation as well as crime prevention it is now recognized that Congress has a duty to utilize its police power in that sphere beyond the reach of the States.

There are at least three fields of possible Federal action that ought to be explored. The first is the exclusion of gambling devices from interstate commerce. Admittedly, this will need careful attention as many otherwise harmless articles are used in gambling. However, we can see no reasonable objection to banning from interstate commerce slot machines and other instruments useful only for organized gambling purposes. A second device that Congress may be able to use in striking at organized crime is control over the transmission of gambling information across State lines. Congress is unquestionably responsible for the manner in which the instruments of interstate commerce are used, and it ought not to permit their use for criminal purposes.

The third area of abuse that ought to be closely scrutinized is line-jumping. The simple form of line-jumping is pointedly illustrated by the local gamblers who cheat the law by shuttling back and forth across the District-Maryland border. In the case of some large criminal syndicates operating in various States on the assumption that not all of the local communities will rise in wrath against them at the same time, local law-enforcement efforts are defeated by the shifting of operations away from the area where the heat happens to be turned on at the moment. It is not yet clear what the Federal Government can do about this practice, other than to inhibit the interstate transportation of equipment for criminal activities, but the problem certainly ought to be explored. It appears to us that Congress has a great opportunity to enhance law enforcement in the area where the States are unable to act.

Restoring Citizenship

Several thousand native-born and naturalized Americans lost their citizenship by voting in the Italian elections of 1946 and 1948. Most of them want to come back to this country but can do so now only as immigrants and under a quota oversubscribed for the next eight years. It seems that, in general, these people were not aware that loss of citizenship would be entailed in voting abroad. Moreover, they were subjected to a considerable amount of pressure to participate in the Italian elections. Church officials and even the British and American military authorities in Italy urged them to vote in order to overcome the Communist Party threat of the period.

These facts give persuasive support to a bill introduced by Representative Francis E. Walter and unanimously indorsed by a House Judiciary Subcommittee to amend the Nationality Act so as to enable such persons to regain their status as Americans by taking an oath of allegiance to the United States within the next three years. Many if not most of them are undoubtedly victims of a misapprehension about the law. They should not be penalized for so innocent an error. Careful screening of the expatriates would appear to be in order to avoid the return of the few who may not be genuinely American. But the bulk undoubtedly deserve a warm welcome home.

The Issue Of Recognition

There is one thing about the British recognition of the Peking government as the government of China that should not be forgotten. It has not taken the State Department by surprise. The freest and fullest consultation has been going on between Washington and London since last September. It seems to be appreciated, judging from the State Department's reaction, that the British are not trying to steal a march on America. It is likewise apparent that they have no more love for communism than Americans. What determined British action was the need in their grim and peculiar situation to be related formally not to a dream world but to the realities of modern China.

The primary fact that the British must recognize is that the Communists control more of China than Chiang Kai-shek's Nationalists did in their 20-year rule. In 1927, Chiang, after issuing out of Canton, stopped at the Yangtze, and set up a government at Nanking without bothering to conquer all China. For example, one of the men who was never conquered was the present Nationalist Premier, Yen Hsi-shan, who carried on serenely as the independent and "model" warlord of Shansi Province up till the time his bailiwick fell to communism. The fact is Communist China has to be recognized because Britain is a neighbor of Communist China through its possession of Hongkong. It has a big stake in trade with and in investment in China. Britain's economic position at home requires that every nerve be strained in building up its exports in order to free itself of dependence upon American charity. We cannot in one breath insist upon the enlargement of British exports and in another breath block British entry into the markets that would accomplish that object.

Let these factors be weighed. For it is supremely important that the British move shall not be allowed to injure the relations between the United States and Britain when really vital differences arise.

In behalf if this cause, we may recall some history, and this, on top of the immediate realities, ought to induce a sense of values. It is said that Britain has been noncooperative. Now the last occasion for concerted action in China was in 1927, when Chiang Kai-shek made his successful bid for power. However, the United States, according to American Foreign Relations, 1930, elected to pursue its own line, in spite of the fact that the foreign powers were then bound together in the concert known as the Nine Power Treaty, which provided for "full and frank communication." Then, as now, the victorious troops had committed excesses, though the troops were not Chiang's. Then, as now, reprisals were talked about—a blockade of the Yangtze Valley. For a time the United States participated in the discussions on a blockade, then broke away, and wound up its dispute with the Nationalists in a unilateral settlement dated April 2, 1928.

This separatism caused some chagrin in foreign quarters. But what created resentment was the subsequent signing of the Sino-American treaty of July 24, 1928, marking American recognition of Nationalist China. It is stated that Secretary Kellogg sent copies of the note accompanying the treaty only on the day that the treaty was signed. By this act the China concert was consigned to the wastepaper basket. The 1928 incident may be profitably recalled in view of the criticism of Britain's recognition of the Peking government.

Recognition is, of course, no sign of approval. Indeed, diplomacy is a safeguard against war which was made necessary more by the hostility than by the friendship obtaining between nations. Otherwise there would not be the elaborate rules and regulations in existence for the protection of diplomats.

In the long run British recognition of Communist China may help rather than hurt American interests. An analogy occurs which will make this clear. When Admiral Leahy was almost the lone Ambassador to Vichy France, he was helpful to the British, as to the Americans, for the contact was not without benefit to the Allied cause. In the same way the United States will profit by the British contact with the Peking government. That is to say, Western influence will be exercised in Peking as well as Russian influence, for the new government, which is already in a condition that only a psychiatrist could diagnose, will not be made to feel a pariah among nations.

The lesson of what lack of recognition entails and what intervention promotes is contained in General Graves' America's Siberian Adventure. We have mentioned it before. The book is well worth reading at a time when identically the same situation has returned—especially by those who would have this country go gallivanting on the same adventure of reversing an accomplished fact in a continent of a country. To be sure, in all the circumstances America must wait before following the British example, but only for the purpose, if there is any statesmanship left, of burying the carcass of a dead, even putrefying, policy.

Mercy Death

There are certain conditions under which life for any of us would be intolerable. The young New Hampshire doctor found himself last week confronted with these conditions, as tortured kinsmen of his doomed patient pled piteously with him to end her senseless and useless struggle against the cruel cancer. To his eternal glory the young physician chose not to buy life or liberty at the price of conscience, but delivered his charge into the keeping of One who is more able to minister to her needs.

"I will (of you) have Mercy, and not Sacrifice, saith the Lord." The extent of the Samaritan doctor's guilt lies solely in his loyalty to this precept. If indeed the bell tolls not for one, or 10, but all of us, then Dr. Sander has been "guilty" of mercy to us all. If we, his accusers, show him any less mercy than he has shown, then indeed must dust be our destiny.

"Saucers and Sorcery"

In your January 1 editorial, "Saucers and Sorcery," you used an incorrect designation for the inhabitants of Venus. The inhabitants of Venus, hypothetical or real as the case may be, should be called "Venerians." You were perfectly correct in using "Martians instead of Marsians," and I am sure you would have referred to "Jovians" rather than to "Jupiterians," so why be incorrect about the inhabitants of Venus?

The names of the planets of the solar system are taken from the names of Roman gods and goddesses, and the inhabitant names are derived from the genitive cases of these names. The genitive case of "Venus" is "Veneris," of "Mars" is "Martis," "Jupiter" is "Jovis," and so on. I am appending a table of designations for the inhabitants of the nine planets. There are, in addition, innumerable planetoids and 30 satellites in the solar system. Twenty-two of the latter are now named, and many of them are large enough to support possible natives or colonizers. Three of the satellites are larger than Mercury!

PLANET	INHABITANT NAME
Mercury	Mercurian
Venus	Venerian
Tellus	Tellurian
Mars	Martian
Jupiter	Jovian
Saturn	Saturnian
Uranus	Uranian
Neptune	Neptunian
Pluto	Plutonian

Editor's Note: The second edition of Webster's International Dictionary recognizes "Venusian" as the correct designation for all things "pertaining to the planet of Venus." But the noun "Venerean" is defined as "a libidinous person." The usage proposed by Mr. Bridges strikes us, therefore, as uncharitable and possibly libelous.

Republican Platform

It is encouraging to see the Republican Party is trying to find out what the American people want. If it gives it to them, then the coming election may be the one Republicans have been waiting for.

The recent indication that the Republicans may invite the Dixiecrats into their fold is a good sign. This would indicate their desire to protect States' rights and the right of the individual.

If the following were included in the next platform, success could almost be assured.

Cut our loans, gifts and general expenditures in foreign countries by at least 25 percent; cut expenses as outlined in the Hoover report; enact legislation which will provide pensions for all persons 65 or even 60 years or over, possibly enactment of the Townsend Plan; make it easier for veterans to obtain loans for buying of homes or business loans; encourage and assist the small-business man; find a way to make our surplus farm products available to needy persons both in our country and abroad.

State Rights Protection

Because unsettled conditions all over the world present a threat to the security of this Nation, it would seem that the first concern of the President and the Congress would be to take all possible steps to prevent needless domestic strife. The public interest demands nonpartisan approach to controversial domestic problems.

The following procedure is proposed as a sound move which should not in any way interfere with individual freedom of expression nor with the passage of legislation, but which would prevent immediate enforcement of measures which might be unconstitutional.

I suggest that by common consent the first act passed by this session of the Congress be a joint measure to the effect that Supreme Court approval must be obtained before any new legislation affecting or involving individual liberties or State rights can become legally operative.

A common-sense procedure, putting the horse in front of the cart, would mean that unconstitutional provisions would be discovered before and not after they had been illegally imposed upon the people.

Franking Abuse

During the Christmas rush I worked at the city postoffice in the primary cases, where mail is first sorted after passing through the cancellation machine. Four or five days before Christmas, we temporary workers observed with some surprise that Senator Byrd, the noted advocate of economy in Government spending, had sent through the mails, in franked envelopes, hundreds of copies of his mid-October address entitled "The Roman Road to Ruin."

To the casual onlooker this seems in itself a definite waste of Government funds, and for a private political purpose. I, for one, fail to see what public service was rendered by Senator Byrd's distribution of his speech, which could give no individual information not already available to anyone having the price of a newspaper.

I fail to see what advantage accrues to the public welfare from having any member of Congress send franked copies of his speeches through the mails.

Economy in our Government could very well begin in Congress itself, and among its overt advocates. Taxpayers would, to all appearances, be spared no little expense if the congressional habit of mailing out franked copies of political addresses were discontinued, as well as the practice of allowing Congressmen to insert in the Congressional Record matter not actually delivered on the floor of Congress.

In justice to Mr. Byrd, let it be stated that he is not the only member of the Nation's Legislature who floods the mails with franked matter. During my brief tenure at the postoffice sorting case, I noticed, too, that a Representative was busy having copies of one of his speeches franked throughout the Boston area. But I was surprised to note that Senator Byrd would engage in the abuse, in view of his frequent public statements.

"Grand Teton Gift"

In your December 21 editorial, "Grand Teton Gift," you justly applauded the generosity of John D. Rockefeller, jr., in making over 33,562 acres in the Jackson Hole area which, in effect, will extend the boundaries of the "magnificent Grand Teton Park." I, too, am grateful for this unselfish and patriotic gift, with the consummation of which it was my privilege to have something to do as Secretary of Interior.

In your editorial you speak of the loss of tax revenue to Teton County, Wyo., as a result of the acquisition by the Federal Government of this large tract of land. I wish that some enterprising newspaper or magazine would undertake to have a study made of the "loss of revenue" complained of by Wyoming citizens as well as by those of other States and communities where national parks or monuments have been created. For my part I am deeply skeptical about these "losses" which the politicians urge when they are trying to throw our great scenic areas into the maw of private exploiters.

I suspect that Yellowstone and Teton National Parks, and now this magnificent new national monument, mean considerable additional revenue to the State of Wyoming—revenue far in excess of what these areas would produce if, as privately owned land, they were subject to State and local taxation. I admit that within such a State as Wyoming some revenue adjustments might be made in order to assure equity between various counties; but, after all, that is a State matter and not necessarily a concern of the Federal Government, which, from fees and at its own cost, maintains the parks and, generally speaking, allows a generous participation of local subdivisions in park revenues.

In setting up such a park as Yellowstone the National Government has provided an objective for hundreds of thousands upon hundreds of thousands of tourists who not only spend money in and near the national park but while en route to the parks, not only within the boundaries of Wyoming itself but of adjoining States.

While questioning the accuracy of the complaints of loss of revenue in such a State as Wyoming as the result of Federal acquisition of land, I am willing to admit that there may be "acute losses of revenue" in the District of Columbia because the Government "has removed large areas of land from the tax rolls." But the land removed in the District of Columbia is worth more than 25 cents to $1.25 an acre.

Undoubtedly, Washington has a point that should be considered in all fairness. But I may be permitted to wonder just what Washington would amount to physically and as a business center and how valuable its real estate would be if it had not been made the National Capital that every American citizen dreams of visiting, not only once but time and again. It may be that Washington taxpayers (of whom I am one) are legitimately crying "wolf." Certainly, as compared with the "oppressed" citizens of Wyoming and other States, those of Washington would have a case even if it may not be as impressive as they are fond of believing.

World Hopes And U. S. Aims

By Andre Visson

Truman's Message

THERE IS in President Truman's message on the state of the Union a passage which is certain to meet with approval both at home and in all the democratic nations abroad: "Today, by the Grace of God, we stand a free and prosperous Nation with greater possibilities for the future than any people have ever had before in the history of the world."

No nation, ideed, ever had greater possibilities than this Nation has at the present time. But possibilities generally go together with responsibilities. And in all truth, President Truman could have added that no nation ever had greater responsibility for the future of the world than this Nation now has. President Truman did not elaborate on it. But he must be aware of America's responsibilities. He indicated this when he declared that this Nation was welcoming the Communist challenge and believed that we will meet that challenge successfully.

But in order to meet it successfully we must be fully aware of the importance of the challenge. The containing of Soviet imperialism and the stemming of the Communist tide is only our immediate objective. Once we have attained it we will be facing the most difficult task a great nation ever before had to face—the restoration of freedom and independence in the world.

WE MUST realize that in the last decades democracy has suffered the greatest setback in its history. The number of people enjoying, in different degrees, the benefits of democracy was greater before the first World War than it is today. Mankind has achieved remarkable technological progress in the last decades despite—or perhaps because of—the "incentives" of two terrible wars. But in the realm of democracy mankind has been pushed back lamentably. The tragic paradox of our time is that the Western democracies won both World Wars but after each, more people found themselves deprived of democratic freedom.

This may be unpleasant to admit, but it must be realized if we are to live up to our responsibilities. Since the end of the first World War democracy, which had until then been advancing all over the globe, though at different speeds, began to retreat. Democratic ideals began to be smeared and trampled. And democratic nations, our own included, found themselves on the defensive. To be sure, they continued to practice, to develop and to try to perfect democracy at home. But their foreign policy became a policy of "reactions" instead of "actions."

BETWEEN the two World Wars we allowed Hitler's Germany and Mussolini's Italy to "act," until their actions—to which were added those of Japan—had become such that we found ourselves obliged to "react." After the second World War we let Soviet Russia "act" in eastern and central Europe, as well as in Asia. Only when the Soviet actions reached the point where they were a threat to our security and that of our friends, were we compelled to "react."

We "reacted" in Europe by the Truman Doctrine, the Marshall Plan and the North Atlantic Pact. We saved Iran by "reacting" properly in the United Nations. But in China we were, unfortunately, not strong enough to react adequately at the same time that we were committed in Europe. And President Truman's statement following his state of the Union message, is official recognition that we cannot now "react" in China, even on the limited territory of Formosa. We do not dare to react in Formosa because, as President Truman puts it, we don't want to "pursue a cause which will lead to involvement in the civil conflict in China."

In the coming weeks we may expect a raging debate on Capitol Hill and throughout the country on whether we should not have "reacted" in China before it had become too late. But despite the passions and the great issues involved, this is likely to be a more or less academic debate. President Truman's statement on Formosa indicates that notwithstanding the last-minute efforts by General MacArthur, the Administration has decided not to help the remnants of the Chinese Nationalist forces defend Formosa.

The stormy discussion over our policy in Asia may drown out the echoes of satisfaction which will come from Western Europe. There, at least, people will feel happy to have received from President Truman a new assurance that the United States will continue to "react" in their area. But as grateful as they are to the United States for its "reactions," they live in the hope that a day will come when the greatest and strongest democratic Nation in the world will take the lead in "acting," not merely in "reacting."

Civil Rights Formula

There is little hope of advancing civil rights in this country until all individuals, the good, bad, the weak and strong actually see themselves as they really are.

We need to grow better people—people who will respect the rights of all. Legislation will not change human hearts, but changed human hearts will make civil rights legislation unnecessary.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

Leaders Get a Truman Pep Talk

By Drew Pearson

AS a practical politician who has been through the mill, Harry Truman knows the hazards of legislating in an election year. However, he showed no signs of back-pedaling on unpassed portions of his Fair Deal program when he huddled with Vice President Barkley, Speaker Sam Rayburn, Senator Scott Lucas and Congressman John McCormack as the new session opened.

On the contrary, he was full of fight and optimism—qualities somewhat less reflected by his legislative chiefs, who have been worried by a rising trend toward isolation and economy, popular resistance to higher taxes, a rebellious farm bloc and a Dixie-Republican filibuster on civil rights.

Truman began by congratulating his congressional leaders on the record of the last session. He told them he thought the Administration had made a pretty good record and was confident it would be kept intact this session. He thought the Democrats should get the rest of the 1948 platform on the law books.

Truman seemed most emphatic about enacting the fair employment practices bill and other parts of the civil rights program. Speaker Rayburn and House Majority Leader McCormack predicted the House would act quickly and favorably on FEPC. However, Senate Leader Lucas, wearing his perennial look of a man with his finger in a mousetrap, dourly replied that the odds were against Senate passage.

The President was not afraid of a filibuster. He insisted that the Administration keep its promises to the people. He said they would be the best judges of who is right, in the next election.

The President made one indirect concession, however, to election year politics. He did not emphasize a substantial boost in taxes. Instead, he listened silently while the leaders explained it would be well-nigh impossible to get a bill raising individual income taxes through Congress this year.

He also criticized the "hysteria" of big business for repealing wartime excise taxes on communications, transportation, luxuries, theater admissions, etc. If excises are repealed, he insisted, there must be an offsetting increase in corporation income taxes.

The Vanished Gavel

THE historic ivory gavel used to rap every Senate to order since Revolutionary days almost didn't make it this session. Up until one minute before the opening bang, frantic pages and assistants couldn't find it.

The Vice President's new bride started the search when she asked to see the famous gavel. It wasn't in its usual place, where it is supposed to be kept under lock and key. So with only a few minutes to go until the session opened, pages and assistants scurried off in search of the missing gavel.

Five minutes before the opening, William Vaughan, the Vice President's assistant, rushed in with a substitute gavel. But at the last minute, Senate Sergeant-at-Arms Joe Duke got word of the crisis. He had removed the gavel to a safer place during the Capitol's housecleaning.

And with one minute to go, he hustled the traditional gavel up to the rostrum and Vice President Barkley triumphantly banged the Senate to order.

Management's 'Wages'

HERE are some facts that Senator Joe O'Mahoney of Wyoming, chairman of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report, is likely to find in his probe of the steel industry.

In all the uproar over prices and wages, little has been said about the high cost of management. For instance, General Motors' 57 top officers and directors were paid $3,048,000 in salaries in 1948. But that was just the beginning. They also drew $5,445,000 in cash bonuses and 22,930 shares of stock as additional bonuses. Finally, the company paid $275,000 into a retirement fund for the same 57 executives—all of which was added to the price of GM automobiles.

Another industry that has been blaming labor for high prices is the building industry. Yet the labor cost for a modern $12,000 home amounth to only $2000 to $2500. The cost of materials runs from $2750 to $4000, with another $1000 for the average price of a lot, leaving a minimum of $4500 to cover taxes, insurance and management. Thus the biggest slice goes to management and profits.

While the big steel companies put up a terrific battle against contributing toward pensions for steel workers, these same companies were setting aside large sums for pensions for steel executives. United States Steel finances a $50,000-a-year pension for each of its three top executives—Olds, Voorhees and Fairless—which does not include an additional $13,000 a year for Olds, toward which he puts up $4 for every $7 by the company. Voorhees will also collect an additional $20,000 each year after he retires, while Fairless will draw $26,000 on top of his regular $50,000, though he puts up only $6 for the company's $10.

In the case of Bethlehem Steel, A. B. Horner, its president, will be able to retire in 1961 at the age of 65 on a pension of $110,000 a year. Furthermore, he won't have to contribute a penny toward this fund. Yet in 1948 his working salary was $263,000.

These are the same steel companies that just boosted prices because of $100-a-month pensions for labor. Senator O'Mahoney may find that the high cost of management also had something to do with high prices.

Note—When General Eisenhower was Chief of Staff he suggested to high Republican leaders that management set a good example to the Nation by cutting profits and prices. The suggestion got a frosty reception.

Capital News Capsules

ATOMIC PARTNERSHIP BREAKING—Atomic energy talks with Britain are near the breaking point. The British are insisting upon the right to continue their own atomic bomb experiments—to which the National Defense Department is dead opposed. It fears too many top secrets will leak out of Britain to Russia. Unless someone gives soon, there won't be any atomic partnership with England; only with Canada.

BIRD CENSUS—Ornithologists are now taking a Nation-wide bird census—to find out how many birds failed to go South for the winter. Like any other census, the ornithologists get their answers from the birds. They are trained to understand bird calls, thereby locating and identifying birds by sound. So far, the count ranges from six species at Mount Mansfield, Mass., to 113 species at Ocean City, Md.

WARTIME SECRECY—Washington embassies are now under the most careful guard since the war. Foreign marines, soldiers and sailors will soon be stationed inside most European embassies to protect military secrets. A group of French marines is expected in Washington shortly. Reason for the sudden security is the military arms program for Europe. Large batches of super top-secret military information are going to the embassies and the Pentagon doesn't want any leaks.

Fulton Oursler's Modern Parables

The Man in the Cage

DEAR Friends and Gentle Hearts:

Whenever I hear someone say that to understand is to forgive, I am reminded of the tragic plight of Bozo, the circus elephant, who was sentenced to death.

Bozo had always been a well-behaved beast, beloved of children. In the center of the ring of the big top, he waltzed and pirouetted, lay down and played dead, and, at the grand finale, led the band with an American flag. But no more!

Three times within a week, he tried to kill his keeper. He roared at boys and girls as if he would like to trample them. Nothing, it seemed, would calm him down; the authorities told his owner he must be put to death, as a public menace.

In those days, many cities had still to form our wonderful societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals. No humane agent was there to stop the manager when he callously decided to make up his losses by selling tickets to Bozo's execution.

Crowds, filling the main tent on Saturday morning, beheld a pile of Army rifles, stacked and ready—and beside it, waiting, a squad of gunners. Bozo, behind the bars of a large circular cage in the middle ring, trudged around a never-ending circle; every now and then he lifted his trunk and bellowed, as if he well knew what was coming.

Outside the cage stood the ringmaster in shiny top hat and tail coat. He was getting ready to give the signal. But just when he was about to start the proceedings, a hand was laid on his shoulder; beside him stood a short, stocky man with a brown mustache, thick-lensed glasses and brown derby hat.

"Do you really want to kill that elephant?" asked the stranger. "Wouldn't you rather keep him alive?"

"No chance," said the manager. "He is a bad elephant; nothing can make him well now."

"Let me go into the cage with him, and in two minutes I will show you you're wrong!"

THE manager looked at the brown-mustached stranger wistfully. But no! To enter that cage meant certain death.

"You would be mincemeat in three minutes," he sighed.

"I thought you'd say that," grinned the little man. "So I brought along a legal release for you. All the risk is mine."

Having made sure that the document was actually a notarized general release, the manager turned and broke the sensational news to the audience. One of their number was going to risk his life in the belief that he could bring Bozo to repentance.

Briskly, the unknown man removed hat and coat and asked the manager to hold them. He removed his glasses and tucked them in a waistcoat pocket.

"Now," he said calmly, "you may open the door."

At the rattle of the lock, Bozo halted in his incessant prowl; he turned bloodshot eyes toward the little steel door; the great beast trembled in all his folds and muscles as the bolts were shot back. The little man stepped inside, and slammed the door behind him.

Bozo gave a warning squeal of wrath. But, unarmed, the intruder stood his ground. Softly he began to speak. Hearing the first few syllables, the elephant fell warily quiet. The tense audience could clearly hear the little man speak, but they could not recognize a word. Only Bozo seemed to understand the language.

The massive body no longer quivering, he remained rigid as if paralyzed, while the droning voice went on, in a kind of harsh yet tender cadence. And presently everybody heard a new cry; a small cry from that dangerous animal; childlike and piteous. The enormous head began to wag from side to side. It was as if Bozo were overpowered, made speechless, by something wonderful and beautiful and beloved.

Now the little man ventured nearer. He lifted his hand and patted the long trunk. With the end of it curled around his wrist, he slowly began to promenade with the elephant round and round the cage, until at last the astounded audience could bear the silence no longer and cheered in raptures.

FINALLY, the little man left the cage and asked for his coat and hat.

"There is nothing bad about Bozo," he told the manager. "He was just homesick. Anybody can get homesick. I talked to him in Hindustani—he's an Indian elephant, and that is the language he grew up with. It sort of made him feel at peace again. He will be all right now for a long time."

He did not seem to see the manager's outstretched hand. Perhaps he did not relish shaking hands with a man who would sell tickets to the death of an elephant. The man in the brown derby simply disappeared. But the manager, staring at the piece of paper he had left behind, looked twice again at the signature; then light began to dawn.

The name was Rudyard Kipling.

Matter of Fact

Johnson Takes Formosa Licking

By Joseph and Stewart Alsop

THUS far, the Formosa mess has cast far more light on the future of the Truman Administration than on the future of Asia. Indeed, the general turmoil has produced only one seriously significant result to date. Secretary of State Dean G. Acheson has scored a rather spectacular triumph over Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson.

It is certainly time for someone to come out with the plain truth that Secretary Johnson has been one of the chief inspirers of the campaign against the State Department's Formosa policy. The other, of course, has been General of the Army Douglas MacArthur.

For a very long time, Secretary Johnson has been indicating dissatisfaction with the State Department's passive response to the Communist victories in Asia. For an even longer time, General MacArthur has been making the same point to all his visitors, with special emphasis on the importance of holding Formosa.

Rather recently, the Joint Chiefs of Staff came to agree with MacArthur, that some attempt should be made to keep Formosa out of Communist hands. Johnson then caused this JCS decision to be transmitted to the public.

There is even some indication that MacArthur and Johnson have been concerting the effort to make Formosa a hot public issue. The existence of a State Department paper warning foreign service officers abroad that Formosa might soon be lost was recently reported from Tokyo. Yet there was no reason why this document should have reached Tokyo for some weeks, if at all. The natural inference is that someone in Washington took special steps to transmit the document to General MacArthur's headquarters. And the further inference is that this may probably have been done by the chief MacArthur sympathizer here, Secretary Johnson.

Clear Policy Sought

IN SUCH ways, and by such devices, the Formosa issue has been heated up in the public mind. In the early stages of this process, Secretary Johnson also began to press for a National Security Council meeting, at which a clear American policy for Asia, including Formosa, would at last be outlined. At this meeting, Johnson let it be known, he would make a last ditch fight for an aggressive program.

When the Security Council meeting was scheduled, it almost appeared as though Johnson's long struggle to take a hand in foreign policy-making might finally be crowned with success. Then the Defense Secretary learned that the President had already made up his mind. Perhaps he also heard that Truman had been informed of the real origins of the Formosa row, and was irritated thereby.

At any rate, to the complete astonishment of his former confidants, Secretary Johnson did not go to the Security Council meeting. He vanished into Florida, leaving even his personal staff ignorant of his whereabouts. The field was thus left to Secretary Acheson, who quickly secured the President's complete acceptance of his more carefully calculated policy.

There may be denials of all this bureaucratic infighting. The suave denial of known facts is an old official custom, rivaling infighting itself in hoary antiquity. What has happened is mainly worth reporting because of the contrast in character between the contestants.

Although he has often shown courage in dealing with the armed services, Secretary Johnson is a pretty adequate symbol of everything that is distressing about the Truman Administration. Although he has sometimes been indecisive, particularly about Far Eastern matters, Secretary Acheson is an excellent symbol of the Truman Administration's good side. And although he breathes no fire and flame, Acheson has now shown that he will fight hard for a principle and will not run away.

Personal Considerations

IN THE choice between Acheson and Johnson, President Truman has certainly been influenced by personal considerations. As Undersecretary of State, Acheson insisted upon working closely with the freshman President, at a time when his chief, James F. Byrnes, wished to run the State Department without White House supervision. Truman and Acheson are now warmly attached to each other.

On the other hand, the President's disillusionment with Secretary Johnson seems to have begun shortly after Johnson went to the Defense Department. Washington now rings with stories, of which a high proportion are authentic, of Presidential manifestations of displeasure with the Defense Secretary. One such was Truman's pointed refusal to ask Johnson to Key West when Johnson wished to report on his recent European trip.

Whatever his reasons, nothing could be more important than the choice the President has now almost openly made, of Acheson over Johnson. Every sign suggests that this choice is permanent, and that Acheson's views will continue to prevail in policy disputes of the future. And this is bound to have the most far-reaching effects, ranging from Asiatic policy to the decision about building a hydrogen bomb.

Our Political Economy

Doff the Rose-Colored Glasses

By Ysabel and Robert Rennie

ECONOMISTS public and private, having consulted their hopes, their charts and their tea leaves, are now offering their predictions for 1950: It will on the whole be a good year.

The Council of Economic Advisers reports the "firm conviction that our business system and with it our whole economy can and should continue to grow." Addresses to the American Economic Association and the American Statistics Association express cautious optimism for the next year.

In his poll of 38 leading economists, J. A. Livingston found that two thirds of them expected our country to rise, or at least remain stable in 1950. Secretary of Commerce Charles Sawyer recommended the "wisdom of a tempered optimism," but thought business would remain at present levels at least during the early part of the year.

The rosy glow is based on several things. The readjustments of 1949 were less severe than expected, and most of the seers who have gone on record believe that the worst is over. Farm prices, which have broken below parity, will be steadied by Government support. Other prices are already fairly steady.

Purchasing power is high, and the American people now have 135 billion dollars in liquid assets. And then there are those GI insurance dividends, which will inject a potential 2.8 billion dollars into the spending stream the first half of this year.

Tailored Theories

PROMPTED by an inner caution, the Rennies are forswearing tea leaves and turbans. Nevertheless, the present level of economic forecasting seems somewhat superficial.

Underlying it is the unspoken assumption that "1920 is safely behind us." In short, the post-war adjustment is over: now we can breathe again.

No one, of course, is claiming that we are in a new era of limitless prosperity. But there is much evidence that economists suit their theories to the times.

During the dark '30s the theory of "secular stagnation" was tailored to the fact of business stagnation. This dismal theory died hard. Now, however, no less an authority than the Council of Economic Advisers has relegated it to the scrap heap. It is hard to feel stagnant in the midst of a boom.

Let us, however, take off the rose-colored glasses and look at all the facts as we face them in this January of 1950.

$60 a Month Drop

A TYPICAL farmer who a year ago was netting $300 a month, was only making $240 by autumn, so sharp was last year's decline in farm prices and incomes.

An average corporation which might have shown profits of a million dollars in the third quarter of 1948, would have been making only $700,000 by the same quarter of last year.

Small business was in a decided squeeze. Many companies showed sharply reduced profits, and others were pushed to the wall. Bankruptcies are still rising as this year opens.

Then there is the problem of our foreign markets. The chronic dollar shortage, reinforced by last September's devaluations of foreign currencies, has seriously hit our export business, and we have not seen the end, by any means.

This has certainly been "readjustment." But is it over?

Backlog Disappearing

LET us consider the secondary effect of these events. As farmers hit support prices and acreage allotments, there will be a reduced demand for machinery. As profits decline, so will business expansion.

This boom was fed by at least two unusual factors: the backlog of demand for durable goods, and the tremendous investment in plant expansion.

The first is rapidly being filled; tractors, refrigerators and washing machines have caught up with demand, and automobiles will be easy to get this year.

As for investment in plant and equipment, that is well below the highs of 1948, and 1950 is still a large question mark on the horizon.

Those who gaze into their teacups are welcome to their bright predictions. But our own coffee cups, on this January morning in 1950, look muddied and unclear.

Looking at the South

A Broad Definition of Lynching

By Hodding Carter

GREENVILLE, MISS. — If lynchings are to be defined according to Tuskegee Institute's listings of the incidence of this hideous crime for 1949, then there were more lynchings in Harlem than in the entire South and very probably more lynchings of white people by Negroes than of Negroes by white mobs.

I don't like to say this, but it needs saying. The fine Negro school's annual report on lynchings appears more political than factual this year, and it should be examined.

The institute describes three lynchings for 1949, "one more than the number two for 1948, two more than the number one for 1947, and three less than the number six for 1946." Actually, unless lynchings are redefined to include all murders committed by three or more people, it is grossly misleading to cite two of the three listed slayings as lynchings.

One Conceded

LET'S LOOK AT THEM. Two were reported from Georgia and one from Mississippi. One of the Georgia murders was certainly a lynching. A 28-year-old Negro was removed from a jail and beaten and shot to death. In the other Georgia murder, a Negro landowner was found dead with a number of bullet holes in his body, after an argument with a group of white men who were fishing in his pond. In the Mississippi murder, a Negro farmer was beaten to death by three white men who accused him of "hogging the road."

Outrageous murders that demanded punishment, yes. Lynchings, no; not by any fair definition of the crime which the South has all but eradicated, but useful as ammunition in the effort to have a Federal anti-lynching law enacted. A lynching has historically been distinguishable from other murders by groups of men in that the perpetrators deliberately planned to murder in order to punish a real or fancied offender or to terrify a part of the citizenry. The crime is deliberate, premeditated and vengeful in nature.

If three drunken motorists who beat an innocent Mississippi Negro to death constitute a lynch mob, so do any three hopped-up muggers in Harlem who murder an innocent pedestrian. If the Federal Government should intervene in the Mississippi murder, it should likewise intervene in any murder in which three or more killers take the life of a victim of their own or a different race.

The Federal agents would be a lot busier outside the South in such case than they would be in the South. More crimes of violence are committed by Negroes against whites in the North and the South than by whites against Negroes in the North or the South. The reason is economic and social rather than racial; but the figures still stand, so why not turn over to Uncle Sam all murder prosecutions except those in which only one or two wrongdoers are involved?

Moreover, the Tuskegee report said that only in one of the two Georgia incidents was any attempt made to punish the offenders. As a matter of record, the three Mississippians are out under bond awaiting trial; and moreover, the feeling against them in the county was so intense that the defense attorney found it expedient to ask for a change of venue, which was granted.

I would vote to convict a white slayer of a Negro as readily as I would vote to convict a Negro slayer of a white man. I would vote to convict the members of a lynch mob as readily as I would vote to convict any other murderers. But it is morally wrong to muddy the waters by listing any murder of a Negro by three white men in the South as a lynching, and not likewise list any murder of a white man or Negro by three Negroes in Harlem, or by any three persons anywhere.

More is at stake here than the passage of a Federal law aimed at an indefensible and declining crime. The rights and responsibilities of States and communities as to the protection of their citizens are in precarious balance. The underlying causes for Harlem muggings and Mississippi murders are alike being lost sight of in a punitive and political assault upon a vital concept of constitutional democracy.

A Lift for Young Careerists

Civil Service Training 'Interns'

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporter

LAST week and this week, 15 men and 2 women are meeting morning and afternoon at the Civil Service Commission Building for what is a new chapter in the management of the vast and complicated Government of the United States.

They are the members of the CSC's first junior management intern program, designed "to discover and train employes possessing outstanding potentialities for administrative and executive responsibilities."

In less formal language, the Government at last has in operation a program to find topflight career employes and to see they have a chance for top jobs without the discouraging entanglement of Civil Service red tape.

The program is a direct result of a highly successful 14-year "intern" program run by the privately operated National Institute of Public Affairs.

This institute, with funds from the Rockefeller Foundation, brought to Washington 521 young men and women fresh from college. In 14 programs from 1935 through 1949, these young people worked as "interns" in lower echelons of the Government, learning its tools and techniques.

A Glowing Report

THE Institute has just issued its final report on the program, a report that the job was done so well that the idea is firmly implanted in the Government's chief hiring and training agency, the Civil Service Commission.

The National Institute of Public Affairs has been run by a board of trustees, headed by Louis Brownlow, during the entire period. One other trustee, Eugene Meyer, chairman of the board of The Washington Post, also served the full 15 years. Head of the staff was Frederick M. Davenport, with Karl E. Stromsen as educational director the past five years.

The Institute searched out promising young men and women in schools from coast to coast. They served without pay in both the executive and legislative branches. This brought problems—how to pay living expenses and how to get a regular Government job after the internship.

Under the CSC program, a way out appears to have been found. CSC takes into its intern program, run by Franklin G. Connor, only persons already hired through Civil Service exams. But they are the newly hired, fresh minds, not yet bogged in Government gobbledygook.

Best of 250

CONNOR thinks there is no problem about getting the best brains to take Civil Service exams. He points out that 23,000 of last June's college graduates took such exams and that some 250 of them now are at work here. The 17 in the first intern program were selected from this group by departmental boards. After two weeks' orientation at the CSC building, they will work for six months in many agencies.

CSC also operates an intern program for "in-service" Government workers, who have been on the payroll for some time. This training began in 1945. Both programs include outside reading and night classwork at American University.

The final report of the National Institute tells the story of 292 men and 197 women. First, these are the statistics:

A total of 194 is in Government service, 168 of them working for the Federal Government, five for States, six for cities and 15 for international organizations.

An additional 125 are in community and professional services: education (47), law (27), journalism (13), private social welfare work (13) and nonprofit service organizations (25). Another 30 are taking graduate studies.

Private enterprises have claimed 61, and of the women 70 have become housewives while nine others are in miscellaneous or unknown posts.

Most of those who work for the Federal Government are in Washington, and the State Department has the largest number.

Analyst for State

A TYPICAL case is that of 31-year-old Dana Bishop Orwick. He was in the fifth of the 14 intern groups, working in the now-abolished Office of Government Reports. Now he is a management analyst in the State Department's Office of Management and Budget.

Many others are on the "assistant to" level in various departments. Stromsen notes that "a considerable number of the interns have moved into positions at or near the top of the Federal Civil Service system in a period of only 12 years since the completion of the first program in June, 1937."

A good example of this group is 33-year-old Wesley McCune, who served his internship with the third group in 1938-39 in the National Labor Relations Board. He spent another year in Government, then did the journalistic rounds of U. S. News, Newsweek, Time and Life and the Kiplinger Magazine before returning to Government as right-hand man to Agricultural Secretary Brannan. He managed to write two well-received books—on the farm bloc and the Supreme Court—along the way.

War Casualties

SIX of the interns lost their lives in the war. Several others married fellow interns. A high percentage of those turned housewife have become active in their local League of Women Voters or other civic groups.

Several teach government in college; one is a high school principal; one is an interior decorator. Several are overseas in Foreign Service posts, others are with military governments.

Both the AFL and the CIO have hired interns. One is the assistant manager of the Jackson, (Miss.) Chamber of Commerce. One runs a small town daily; another (Martha Hall) is a Washington Post reporter.

One has become a Washington lobbyist with Americans for Democratic Action. Another works for Ford. Still another is Harold Stassen's research director, and another is vice president of a big Philadelphia bank.

Only one appears to have gone into politics for himself. Rudie Wilhelm, jr., an intern in 1937-38 with the Commerce Department, is a State legislator in Oregon. Several others have Capitol Hill jobs, however.

Principles Spreading

THE sum total of the program has been the working out of a feasible plan for increasing the quality, and horizon, of the career employe of the Government. Now the long-term program, run by the Government itself, is getting under way.

Few other private organizations have been able to write such a "finis" to their programs.

JOSEPH ALSOP'S review of our China policy, "Why We Lost China," starting in the Saturday Evening Post, is certain to stir up everyone concerned.

Throughout the fateful years in China, charges the columnist, who served part of that time on the staff of General Chennault, American representatives there (General Stilwell and his aides) actively favored the Chinese Communists and at the same time contributed by their actions to the weakness of the Nationalist government. This they did, according to Alsop, by unwittingly playing into the hands of the worst reactionaries.

In the complicated Chinese political strife, Stilwell's diplomacy resulted in the triumph of the wily Dr. H. H. Kung, backed by the two sisters, Mme. Kung and Mme. Chiang, and the weakening of the "modernist" member of the family, T. V. Soong. If, instead of constantly insulting and fighting with Chiang Kai-shek, Stilwell had won his confidence, he could have promoted by alternate pressure and persuasion the better elements in the regime, Alsop thinks.

Just before Stilwell's recall, Alsop recounts, he had been given power to aid either Communists or Nationalists, as he saw fit. This would have resulted in the Communist rise to power in China by the end of the Japanese war or shortly thereafter, says Alsop.

Also in the Post is a story on Madame Minister Perle Mesta, by Martha Gellhorn. In between brooding about the life of the foreign correspondents, Miss Gellhorn uses everything but her claws on the subject. Virginius Dabney writes an appraisal of the Byrd machine.

THOMAS E. DEWEY is thought to be taking a new interest in Eisenhower, writes Richard Wilson in Look. If true, this is the first GOP leader to do so, notes the Washington bureau chief. "The rest . . . regard the general as too hot to handle." Eisenhower CAN be drafted by the Republicans in 1952, asserts Wilson, and gives reasons why things are different now.

Harold B. Clemenko analyses "What's Wrong With Our Hospitals?" So serious has the financial position of most hospitals become that something has to be done to remedy the situation. After all, says Clemenko, most business concerns that run constantly in the red, eventually fold up. Since the hospitals can't go out of business, the author offers some remedies of his own.

TOWN AND COUNTRY, which caters to what must be the upper half of the top 1 percent income bracket, runs a solemn bit of advice from a decorator, Frederick P. Victoria, on New Year's resolutions to be taken before redecorating one's house. This project can be done either while the inhabitant is away, or can be supervised in "unthreatened privacy." ("If you did give a party in January, nobody would come to it.")

First of all, you must choose your decorator carefully and then abide by his decisions as you would those of your doctor. Resolution 4 reads: "I will rid myself of overscale pieces, which are usually hand-me-downs anyway." No. 5: "I will cast all economic considerations to the winds and ruthlessly exile the Oriental rug that grandfather brought from the Far East." Whether or not Pop likes it, No. 7 is: "I will recover the man-of-the-house's favorite leather chair in a fabric which conforms to the new scheme." If the old pictures are not in sentiment with the rest of the room, then "out with them." No. 10: "I will not try to replace them with bargains. I will remember that there is no such thing as a bargain in art." No. 11: "I will never, never, no matter whether I'm expecting guests or not, forget to keep fresh flowers in my room."

MAJORITY LEADER SCOTT LUCAS, early in his first term as Majority Leader, worried himself into the hospital with an ulcer. There, reports Sidney Shallett in Collier's, he read Bancroft's History of the United States, realized that the Senate had run along 160 years without him and probably could do so again. Since then "I haven't quarreled with any of my colleagues, my office staff or my wife," says Lucas.

As a means of keeping calm, Lucas writes verse under the name of Senator Sorghum, relates Shallett. A recent sample:

"Senators who preside, Shouldn't rhyme, shouldn't chide."

In a piece entitled, "Was Joe Louis the Greatest?" Gene Tunney renders the decision in favor of Jack Dempsey as the greatest heavyweight of all time.

JACK DEMPSEY himself writes in Ebony that no man can be a great fighter who has not literally had to fight against poverty and hunger at some time in his life. That's one reason, explains Dempsey, why Negro boxers today unquestionably dominate the fight game. "They start punching as soon as the bell rings. That's what a fighter should do." Furthermore, adds the former champion, Negro fighters are not afraid of hard work. They train harder and more conscientiously than white fighters.

HENRY JONAS ROSENFELD has made and sold 14 million dresses for women since 1942 and is the subject of a New Yorker profile. "In dresses, Henry is a Henry Ford," Lillian Ross quotes an old timer in the industry. "He is a Christian Dior from the Bronx."

No one can quite account for the Rosenfeld success, says Miss Ross. Good sence or good luck, or both—it's still a topic for debate any day on Seventh ave. An easy-going boss, Rosenfeld is less interested in the smartness or capability of people who work for him than in loyalty. And of the people with whom he does business, he demands only to be liked. Yet, in the six years he has been in business, the assets of Rosenfeld, Inc., have risen from $40,000 to an estimated six million dollars, and Rosenfeld originals literally blanket the country.

Notes on the Margin

By Lee Grove

HARD at work these mornings on another novel is Helen Todd of Route 1, Falls Church, Va.

Putting two and two together—because she is reluctant to discuss her work until it is completed—it would seem that to describe the book as a biographical novel of eighteenth century England would be a good guess.

A year of hard research, at least, preceded the writing—which is done with a pencil on both sides of the paper. This latter habit is nowadays practically unheard of, but Miss Todd explains with a laugh: "It is probably a childhood trauma—afraid I'll run out of paper."

Miss Todd is also refreshingly frank about why she started to write: "Because I like to read so much, I guess." This is probably the reason why a great many people write, though for some reason or another not so many admit it.

Springing from this love of reading: "So Free We Seem," a 1936 historical novel; "A Man Named Grant," in 1940, a Houghton, Mifflin nonfiction fellowship award; and two more novels, "The Root of the Tree," in 1944, and "High Places," which appeared a couple of years ago.

"THE READERSHIP of books by those who have a college education is practically the same regardless of the income level.

"The principal difference between income levels is in the increasing proportion of active readers among those with high school education as we go from lower to higher income levels and a similar trend for people with grade school education.

"This leads to the conclusion that education is a much more important factor influencing the readership of books than income level."—Henry I. Burr, "Observations on Trade Book Sales," 1949.

BOOKS

Material Hardly Justifies Rush

'Beedle' Needn't Have Hurried

By Ferdinand Kuhn

MY THREE YEARS IN MOSCOW. By Walter Bedell Smith. 335 pages and index. Lippincott. $3.75.

"BEEDLE" SMITH seems to have broken a record in rushing into print with the story of an official assignment. The winner up to now has been James F. Byrnes, whose book hit the presses, in serial form, 10 months after he resigned as Secretary of State.

Now "Beedle" has made Byrnes look like a sluggard. His complete book goes on sale a little more than nine months from the time he resigned as Ambassador to the Soviet Union. The time lag is shrinking year by year.

At this rate, we may expect some future ambassador to have a fat book contract in his pocket and serial rights all arranged when he presents his credentials. We may even be able to buy an autographed copy of his book when he steps off the plane that flies him home.

A Stalin 'Revelation'

THE new material in the Bedell Smith book hardly justifies all the hurry in getting it on sale. As an inside story, it is not a patch on the recollections of James W. Gerard and Henry Morgenthau, sr., in World War I; as a story of Soviet-American relations, it cannot compare in importance with Maj. Gen. John R. Deane's book, "The Strange Alliance."

We do learn of Stalin's personal assurance to the Ambassador in 1946 that Russia would go "not much further"—but, then Stalin has said the same kind of thing to Eric Johnston, Harold Stassen and a long list of others.

We also get the first long account, by a high-level participant, of the Moscow Conference of Foreign Ministers in 1947. Someone, though, seems to have blue-penciled General Smith's account, for it tells next to nothing of what Secretary Marshall told Stalin in their meetings that dreary spring.

General Smith writes, too, the first-hand story of the famous "peace offensive" episode in the spring of 1948, when the Russians broadcast and distorted a supposedly confidential approach and warning from the State Department. The general says "there was no misunderstanding whatever of the confidential nature of this communication" when he presented it to Molotov in Moscow.

He puts life and color into the story, but otherwise he simply confirms what the State Department told us at the time it happened. Sometimes, it seems, the "now-it-can-be-told" approach adds nothing to public knowledge.

An Intelligent Observer

WHAT MAKES the book worth reading is not its diplomatic history, nor its pages about how the Ambassador managed to get eggs for breakfast, but rather its description and appraisal of conditions in the Soviet Union.

For three years General Smith was able to draw on the researches of what he rightly calls a "carefully selected, capable and devoted" embassy staff in Moscow. He himself was an intelligent observer. He kept his eyes and ears open, even in the restricted circles in which he had to move.

The result is a series of chapters on Soviet industry, farming, religion, housing, secret police and much else that will help Americans understand their only potential enemy of the present day.

Although he loathes the Soviet system, as every American does who is exposed to it for more than a few days, he found much to respect in the Soviet conquest of illiteracy, the strides of industry in a backward land, and the one collective farm he was allowed to see.

On the other hand, he finds the arts and crafts degraded by "intellectual purges." He estimates that a million men serve in the secret police and that 15 million men and women are working at forced labor, in varying degrees of horror.

He is shocked and revolted by the propaganda of hate that is dripped into Russian ears, day after day and by every medium of expression. He rightly says that this, more than any other single aspect of the Soviet state, makes him fear for the future and should be a matter of grave concern to every American.

He publishes excerpts from children's propaganda books giving a picture of the United States that only diseased or self-drugged minds could conceive.

Though he pictures the men of the Politburo as intelligent and tough-minded, he thinks they "seem, at times, to be hypnotized" by their own propaganda, "drunk with the liquor of their own brewing."

'Sixth Sense' Develops

SHIELDED as he was from contacts with Russians, shadowed everywhere by the police, he nevertheless finds that Soviet diplomatic tactics are not always a mystery.

"Much as we were deliberately isolated from original sources of information in the Soviet Union," he writes, "it is inevitable that when one lives there long enough to be thoroughly steeped in Russian history, Stalinist ideology and Communist double-talk, he develops a fairly accurate 'sixth sense' for what the Kremlin is going to do, and why."

The general's "sixth sense" tells him that there will be no change of heart in the Kremlin, no understanding with the West as the West understands the word, but no war if the West stays vigilant and prepared. His conclusions do him credit as a military man and as a citizen.

For he has the sense to realize that the West cannot rely on military and economic strength alone. "Basic to that strength," he reminds us, "is the passionate devotion of our people to the free way of life. We can maintain the material, moral and spiritual strength of America if our democratic faith remains strong, and we can draw from this deep wellspring of faith the firmness and fortitude necessary to carry out the tremendous responsibilities of world leadership that have developed upon us."

Maybe this eloquence doesn't sound like a general, or like "Beedle." One must credit him with it, for he nowhere mentions a ghost-writer. But surely he didn't dig up all his information by himself; surely he drew on the knowledge and the good nature of his embassy subordinates. Wouldn't it have been gracious of him to acknowledge their help, even by a few lines in a preface?

Timely Studies on Social Insurance

Security Related to Whole Economy

By John J. Corson

THE AMERICAN SOCIAL SECURITY SYSTEM. By Eveline M. Burns. Houghton, Mifflin. $4.

AMERICAN SOCIAL INSURANCE. By Domenico Gagliardo. University of California. $5.

CERTAINLY this is a propitious time for the publication of books on Social Security and pensions. Following the lead of the mine workers, the auto workers and the steel workers, many unions are concentrating on demands for pensions. The Senate is soon to consider a House-approved bill vastly expanding Social Security. Employers and workers alike are being forced to think about pensions and benefits.

For those who would have the Government provide the pensions, Dr. Eveline Burns has presented a good, comprehensive statement. Her book is divided into five parts.

First, she states simply the essentiality of continuing income to the average family and the technique used to replace workers' incomes when unemployment, illness, old age or death hits. Secondly, she describes and appraises each of the existing social insurances, including workmen's compensation and the less often considered insurances for the aristocratic railroad workers.

Next, Mrs. Burns relates our various provisions for the security of veterans to the general Social Security system. Fourth, she pictures the public assistance arrangements — their nature, costs and administration. Finally, she looks ahead—and she puts her finger squarely on the importance of establishing security arrangements for all workers, of providing more generous benefits, and the problems of administration and finance. I only wish she had explored more freely alternative methods of providing security which now seem remote from our conventional ways.

In contrast, Gagliardo essays a smaller task. This book offers, principally, a description of existing social insurances. So far as it does, it is thorough and accurate. As to security provisions for the sick and disabled, it provides a fuller picture than Mrs. Burns' work. All in all, it is a useful but not a significant book.

Gagliardo's work suffers, in comparison, because Mrs. Burns has sensed so keenly the importance of relating our Social Security institutions to the whole functioning of the American economy and the American society. Too much time is given to patching up existing machinery and too little to thinking anew as to how to provide not alone income, but wholesided security for industrial workers in an urban civilization. Out of a rich experience in Britain, Canada and the United States, Eve Burns sees that need clearly.

Neither of these books is easy reading. The provision of security for workers who become old and those who are unemployed, disabled or sick has become big business. The problems involved can be solved only by complicated techniques utilizing the lore of the economist, the actuary, the lawyer and others. But since it seems apparent that the American people are determined to have security, through one source or another, the lessons these books teach had better be learned.

Biting Pen Tells Tender Story

LITTLE BOY LOST. By Marghanita Laski. Houghton, Mifflin. 248 pp., $2.75.

A GREATER contrast between Marghanita Laski's new book and her first caustic success — "Toasted English" — could scarcely be imagined. For this, as its title suggests, is a tender, wistful tale, peopled by sensitive, lovingly drawn characters.

Hilary Wainwright's French wife was killed in Paris by the Gestapo for her part in the Resistance. No one could be sure what had happened to their baby, which its father had seen only on the day of its birth.

The plot grows out of the conflict within Wainwright, a young English poet, over whether or not he should search for his child. At the end of the war he has repressed all memories of the past, feeling that he can go on living only if he protects himself from emotional involvement. Yet his son may be alive, somewhere in France, 5 years old.

The search which inevitably takes place leads to a provincial Catholic orphanage, and the author builds up rare suspense to the last page.

Miss Laski is not entirely successful in her presentation of Hilary Wainwright's emotional evolution. A measure of understatement would have made him a more convincing person. This is not a fatal flaw, however, for the true hero of the tale is the little boy, so compassionately portrayed that it is not at all surprising to find the book dedicated to the author's own 6-year-old son.

Colorful Roundup Of U. S. Horses

HORSES AND HEROES. By Frazier and Robert Hunt. Scribners. $4.50.

FRAZIER HUNT, the retired newspaperman, and his son Robert have written an equine history that makes no show at complete truth, but lovers of horseflesh should like this collection of tales about the horse's 450 years in America.

Some of the touches given to the stories are admittedly hearsay and frankly dramatic in intent. To sportsmen, however, anecdotes are the common currency of their mutual interests. The stories range from the legendary background of the great Godolphin Arabian to the factual time and distance records of the tough breed of animal on the Pony Express, with time out for good background notes on bloodlines and breeding of the horse in America.

The heroes of the title are not only the riders but also the breeders and bettors of the American horse. Some, such as the Tennessee breeder, Andrew Jackson, and the Southern military man, Robert E. Lee, are famous; others, like the Jesuit priest, Father Kino, and "Portugee" Phillips, the cavalry scout, are unknown. All add to this colorful roundup of America's horse history.—DON LIEF.

The History of One Bill

Behind the Scenes in Lawmaking

By Kathleen L. Barber

CONGRESS MAKES A LAW: The Story Behind the Employment Act of 1946. By Stephen Kemp Bailey. Columbia. 282 pp. $3.75.

HIGHLY original in both conception and execution is this account of congressional policy-making. Mr. Bailey has taken one piece of legislation—the controversial Murray full employment bill of the Seventy-Ninth Congress—and has followed its stormy history from its first faint stirrings in the mind of Russell Smith, legislative representative of the National Farmers Union, to its anticlimactic repose on President Truman's desk as Public Law 304.

Mr. Bailey tells a lively story of behind-the-scenes activity on Capitol Hill at every stage of the struggle over postwar employment policy. He considers dispassionately the staff jealousies between the Murray War Contracts Subcommittee and the Kilgore War Mobilization Subcommittee; the role of the "Lib-Lab Lobby" in securing Senate passage of the bill; the opposition business pressures which moved into high gear during House consideration; the ambivalence of the Administration throughout the debate, not excluding John Snyder's equivocation.

Pressure Against Pressure

LITTLE known by those unfamiliar with practices on the Hill is the "two-way relationship" between Congress and pressure groups, particularly well illuminated in this study. For example, Congressman George Outland, chairman of the sponsors' steering committee in the House, asked organizations supporting the bill to get their members to write to Truman urging him to put pressure on the Democrats in the House committee to report HR 2202 quickly and favorably.

On the other side of the fence, Congressmen Carter Manasco and Will Whittington had the assistance of a General Motors-paid researcher in setting up the House hearings, aid in redrafting the bill from several business pressure groups, and help from many more in inciting public opposition to the original measure.

To answer the question, "Why did this particular legislator hold the ideas and values about social issues which caused him to look at the Full Employment Bill as he did?" Mr. Bailey explores in a very interesting chapter the social and economic backgrounds of the members of the crucial Joint Conference Committee.

"In a study of policy-making," the author writes, "it is not enough that we understand influences external to the policy-maker. Constitutions and statutes, public opinion and pressures, facts and arguments, parties and patronage—these are factors which are important only as they reach and are interpreted and accepted by men's minds and prejudices. Like the action of light on variegated surfaces, external factors are absorbed, refracted or reflected, according to the peculiar qualities of the minds they reach. The full employment bill was in no small measure shaped by forces and cultural symbols in Greenwood, Miss.; Allegan, Mich.; Pocatello, Idaho; Wilmington, Del., and Temple, N. H."

Interviewed 400 Persons

MR. BAILEY, an assistant professor of government at Wesleyan University, admits in his preface sympathy for the original bill. However, his study is unquestionably as objective as could be written by anyone with more than a mild interest in the issue. His written sources are extensive and well documented; his live sources are astounding. He interviewed some 400 persons in Washington and in many States and congressional districts in the attempt to bring to light "the submerged data about S. 380."

The author's chief interest in making the study is not the Full Employment Bill itself, but the light that its history sheds on the legislative process and policy-making in a democracy. The book makes a powerful case for his final recommendations: "strengthening the only two instruments in our political life which have an inherent responsibility to the Nation as nation: The President and the national political parties." Party unity in Congress he sees as the most vital step toward a more responsible political system.

A new session of Congress, opening as this book appears, promises multiple examples of the confusion and frustration Mr. Bailey attributes to party weakness, disharmony and irresponsibility. His plea for political accountability obviously is live copy.

ZACHARY AND STELLA
. . . two of the characters in "Gentian Hill"

A Romance of Adolescence

Novel of Devon Coast Excludes All Villains

By Sterling North

GENTIAN HILL. By Elizabeth Goudge. Coward-McCann. 402 pp. $3.50.

IF YOU'RE a historical novel fan who is tired of blood and gore, sex and seduction, you might try this almost pastoral historical noval by Elizabeth Goudge. Although the Napoleonic wars are raging in the background, the author dismisses them with one naval battle scene. And every woman in the book is either too young or too old to be the usual buxom heroine.

Miss Goudge, a gentle little English woman who was born with the century, has written some 15 books in the last 17 years. She weighs 84 pounds, thinks of herself as a Victorian, admires pre-Raphaelite art, and collects "friends, china, nice memories and increasing infirmities." She prefers to write about pleasant people, and to date has never had a villain in any of her novels.

What (one might reasonably ask) is her wide appeal? Why did more than 1,250,000 Americans purchased her MGM prize-winning novel "Green Dolphin Street?

My guess would be that she is being richly rewarded for the very inadequacies which keep her from being a serious creative writer.

Real life is sometimes painful. Miss Goudge and her readers would like to avoid pain. Real people often suffer. Miss Goudge prefers to save her characters from any actual suffering. Real men and women are usually motivated; they struggle against such worthy adversaries as environment, other human beings and flaws in their own character. Out of such struggles come justifiable comedy and tragedy—plots which need never be fabricated.

Leans on Happenstance

MISS GOUDGE has always circumvented this categorical imperative of serious fiction by the continuous use of happenstance and coincidence.

For example, in her present novel, "Gentian Hill," set on the Devon coast (1804-1815), Miss Goudge has managed to write a romance of adolescence which manages to evade all of the following basic human equations:

There is not a single instance of a normal parent-child relationship. The major characters are fate-buffeted orphans. There is not one example of mature love between an adult male and an adult female. Love is an etherealized dream. And the seething politics, spiraling inflation and intellectual ferment of the era are largely ignored.

But it is true that all three major characters, Stella, the elfish little heroine, Midshipman O'Connell, the adolescent hero, and Father Charles Sebastian Michel de Colbert are in one way or another victims of the recent French Revolution. Thus history is at least alluded to.

And it is also true that the humanitarian author in passing shows distaste for war, London prisons and the brutality of the British navy (in which young O'Connell, after an interlude at the Devon farm where Stella lives, makes his spectacular rise to fame, participates in the Battle of Trafalgar, and ultimately gains captaincy of the ship taking Napoleon to St. Helena).

A Bit Too Much

IT IS SOMETHING of a relief to read a historical novel which has but nine violent scenes in 402 pages; a book which prefers the misty legends of the Devon coast to unabashed swaggering, swilling, sweating and swearing on every erotic page. But costumery and local color do not take the place of solid drama enacted by three-dimensional flesh-and-blood characters.

It seems to me highly improbable that the lives of three "orphans" should be so intertwined through explosions, desertions and other coincidences all conveniently located on the Devon coast near a chapel dedicated to the succor of such victims. That little Stella should providentially dream of O'Connell's danger and distress in London, thus paralleling a similar dream whereby the legendary Rosalind saved her legendary lover, John. And four dramatic rescues from sinking ships are a bit too much for an Elizabeth Goudge romance.

As for the entire story of the priest, once a French comte, it seems to me sheer and needless fabrication, clinging to the main story line by the most incredible and time-worn of plot devices.

Literary Noblesse Oblige

EVIDENTLY, Elizabeth Goudge is one of the last living dyed-in-the-wool romantic writers. To warm her heart, every character must be an acknowledged aristocrat or an aristocrat in disguise. She practices literary noblesse oblige toward the sturdy peasants of Devon and the poor victims of Newgate. But she really sings her most lyrical cliches over the high-born victims of the French mobs.

Even a beggar woman now practicing white magic and dealing in magic potions and charms was born an artistocrat. So, of course, was the priest, the young lovers and numerous other characters, major and minor.

When the sun sets, it brims "the leafy valleys with liquid gold." The little heroine has "gray eyes full of light . . . her short, dark curls blowing about her face." And no one ever shouts or exclaims. On page after page after page they "ejaculate."

Just for Miss Goudge's future use, we might point out that synonyms or near synonyms for "exclaim" include: cry out, wail, howl, shout, scream, or, if necessary, conclamate, ululate or even exululate.

Gentle reader, this may be your dish of tea. It isn't mine.

Book of Many Levels

Adult, Perceptive Story Of a Girl Born of Hate

FRANCES. By Catherine Hubbell. W. W. Norton. 299 pp. $3.

THE highest function of fiction is to be truer to life than life itself. Not to hold the mirror up to life; there is no art in that. But to set forth a situation from life, stripped of all its irrelevancies, organized with an inner consistency that transcends the happenings of daily experience. In this adult, perceptive novel Catherine Hubbell has done just that.

"Frances" is also a deeply moral book, in spite of the glitter of its fashionable, wealthy, intensely urban world. For Frances Sheldon, born of hatred, growing up in New York City to be debutante, alcoholic, divorcee, finds freedom only in forgiveness, the most difficult of all—forgiving the person who has done her the greatest harm, her mother.

Two Absolute Hates

"MARRIAGE gives you a base, Miriam. You can operate from there," Frances' mother's mother, one of the Vanderhoffs of old New York, had said. Frances was the product of a marriage made in accord with this advice.

Each parent hated her for being the embodiment of the other. And toward each other, "so absolute was the hate, his for her and hers for him, that it was the perfect fixative in their lives, retaining all shapes, colors, customs, manners, contacts, weights, movements, speech, silences, as the charcoal drawing is caught and cannot be blown away . . ."

As a child, clumsy, strange, owlish, watchful, Frances learned to build defenses against the world, to conform outwardly so that people, particularly her mother, would let her alone.

Old even in adolescence, at 21 Frances was a "rare, direct, muted siren of a girl . . . disturbing, womanly, timeless," but struggling still to become herself, to escape the pattern cut out for her by her brittle, brilliant mother.

The anguishing struggle against domination began in Frances' small rebellious lies about school and culminated in her determination to marry Tom Fernald, the garage mechanic; began in secret childhood sips of port from the buffet in the dignified house in the East 30's, and ended in a rest home. But the focal rebellion was against Miriam's determination that her daughter's love for Randolph Hewitt, distant cousin and her own close friend, should not be realized.

Etched Scenes

THIS is a book which can be read on many levels: for its tense, well-drawn story alone; for its rare insight into character motivation; or for a series of sharply told scenes—the night in a Portland hotel room with Dickie Sykes, the sailor; a bartender reading "Moby Dick" while Frances and Joel became engaged; a chromium-furnished kitchen full of Fernalds on a block in Queens.

Miss Hubbell writes with both economy and sensitivity, and one cannot help hoping that Hollywood never finds out about her book.

Atomic Test In Pictures

OPERATION SANDSTONE. The Story of Joint Task Force Seven. Edited by Clarence H. White. Infantry Journal Press. 104 pp. $3.50.

JOINT Task Force Seven was created by the Joint Chiefs of Staff for the purpose of constructing an atomic energy proving ground at Eniwetok Atoll, Marshall Islands, and to assist the Atomic Energy Commission in conducting the first series of tests ("Operation Sandstone") in April and May, 1948.

Approximately 10,000 persons made up the task force, commanded by Lieut. Gen. John E. Hull, USA, including members of every branch of the armed forces, AEC, Coast Guard, Public Health Service and Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Clarence H. White's large book is a pictorial record of Operation Sandstone — within security limits. As such, it tells the story of the task force from the time it left the States to its return, and tells it very admirably.

Taking the story from start to home again offers a problem in climax, however. Chronologically, the climactic pictures (of the explosion) should occur before the end of the book. Presumably for dramatic effect, they are here held back until the end, which puts them out of sequence and leaves the reader a little dissatisfied.

This defect is more than offset by the explosion pictures in color. These pioneer color shots are magnificent.—LEE GROVE.

In a Nutshell

SELECTED WRITINGS OF BORIS PASTERNAK. New Directions. 288 pp. $1.50.

BABETTE DEUTSCH and the English critic C. M. Bowra are among the translators represented in this compact collection of the poetry and prose of Boris Pasternak, the Russian writer born in 1890, who is considered by some as one of the best lyric poets of modern times.

MASTERPLOTS. Edited by Frank N. Magill; story editor, Dayton Kohler. Vol. II, May-Z. Salem Press, Inc. (Greenberg). Two vols. $10.

"MASTERPLOTS," in two volumes, gives the plots of 510 famous novels, plays, epic poems and legendary tales from the world's literature. In the condensations the stories are unfolded as the authors told them, and are preceded by critiques and such factual information as type of plot, time of plot, locale and first publication date. Ranging from Aristophanes to Charles Jackson's "Lost Weekend," it is inevitable that the omissions are many and the choice of sublitерary inclusions sometimes curious. The book, however, is useful and a worth-while addition to the bookshelf.

THE STORM AND THE SILENCE. By David Walker. Houghton, Mifflin. $2.75.

THE STORM center that is Tam Diamond's brain causes him to become a jobless transient—then a murderer. In action that is ponderously slow, David Walker traces Tam's transformation from a solid though aloof citizen to a fugitive, then has him die in a blizzard. Thus a natural storm compensates for an unnatural storm.

The interpolatino of a symbolic white stag and a maladjusted woman adds nothing to the plot.

SIXTY POEMS OF SCEVE. Translated and edited by Wallace Fowlie. Swallow Press and William Morrow. 150 pp. $3.

IN THE POETRY of Maurice Sceve, who wrote in Lyon in the first half of the sixteenth century, Wallace Fowlie sees a deep relationship with the modern poets of today, and discusses him in particular with Mallarme. Fowlie includes the original French with his translation.

THE SEVEN VOYAGES OF SINBAD THE SAILOR. Heritage Press. $5.

ARTISTIC treatment of a classic. The translation is from the Arabic to the French by J. C. Mardrus, and then into English by E. Powye Mather. There is an introduction by C. S. Forester, and the illustrations are by Edward A. Wilson.

A HISTORY OF THE CONQUEST OF MEXICO, by William Hickling Prescott. Heritage Press. $5.

A TEXT now regarded as a classic has been edited down into a "good story capitally told" by Harry Block, with illustrations by Miguel Covarrubias. There is a preface by the author, and an introduction by Block.

The Improper New Yorkers

The Book Business Lampooned

HOME TOWN. By Cleveland Amory. Harper. 310 pp. $3.

A SHY Arizona boy comes to New York for the publication of his first book and this satire begins to sizzle.

Cleveland Amory, who impaled the "Proper Bostonians" in a previous best seller, now turns his rapier upon the improper New Yorkers. How many of the following types can you identify?

1. "Darling, you were sensational! You dissolved everybody! Why don't you tell anybody about these things . . . Everybody's here, darling. Harry Rovere. He's one of the biggest men in TV, darling. He's dying to meet you. I couldn't be more impressed. I'm pulverized."

2. "He winked at the bartender. He said there was a gunman's sidewalk in every town in the old days. It was right in the middle of the street. It was a sort of safety zone and when Wild Bill walked up it in Hays or Dodge or any of those places he was marshal of . . ."

3. "Then the day after the quiz show we'll follow it up with a bookstore autographing job . . . They put you up on a platform and you just keep signing and smiling . . . and then we'll get you going on your blurbs, too. You know, that's when one author hails another author on the jacket . . . "

4. "Well, as I say, the big boy's little book is all about Wild Bill Hickok, and I know you'll all want to run right out and get it. It's so wonderful. Do you know the first thing I think of when I think of Wild Bill Hickok? I think of Hick's wonderful wild rice. It's just chock-full of fine food energy and those big body-building proteins . . . "

To give you a little help: (1) is Gin, the girl with the bombsight hair who calls everybody "darling" and is making a pass at (2), Mitchell Hickok, the big, honest, bashful, inarticulate Westerner who has written a book being published by (3) Bill Devereaux, the completely cynical publicity man for Hathaway House, who lines up his reluctant author for an interview on (4) Mabel Bradley's soap, soup and celebrity hour over a national network.

These are but four swift caricatures in a novel which seethes with wicked vignettes.

A Naive Idea

HATHAWAY HOUSE, the book publishing firm, gets the complete treatment, from the editor-in-chief (who can never remember the title of a book or the name of an author) down to the newest and dumbest secretary. What Mr. Amory thinks about New York book publishers should dissuade thousands of would-be writers from ever touching a typewriter again—a not unmixed tragedy.

But the book publishers in this novel are relatively harmless, sincere, honest and lovable people compared to the high-pressure promotion men, radio and television boys, stray blondes and other flotsam and jetsam reeling around New York's one-big-continuous cocktail party.

The single element that keeps this book from getting too bitter is the astute device of allowing youthful Mitch Hickok to develop as a three-dimensional, flesh-and-blood Western hero. He doesn't want to autograph books, go to parties in his honor, make TV and radio appearances, wear Western costumery or badger book salesmen, newspaper reporters and women's clubs into promoting his modest volume.

He has the naive idea that an author's job is to write and that if his book is any good it will sell by itself without all the gymnastics. And his patent honesty is so refreshing in a city crammed with super self-salesmen that he continuously wins by default.

Blow-by-Blow Account

DESPITE its satirical exaggerations, "Home Town" tells a great deal of truth about one sort of book publisher. It is a caricature, but not so far from gospel as you might think.

It gives a blow-by-blow account of the birth of a book from come-on letter, through contract, to manuscript, galleys and final product. And it demonstrates as nothing else except the actual experience can, what any author is up against these days unless he is so solidly established that his product is a household word.

The unknowing may wonder whether Mr. Amory in blasting the book business isn't burning his bridges. Our guess is that not only his own, but most of the other publishers will want him on their list. It is virtually impossible for an author to estrange his publisher if he writes books that sell.—S. N.

District Affairs

Civic Groups Face a Busy Year

By Harry N. Stull

THE first half of the twentieth century saw many civic improvements here. Most of them were brought about by the persistent efforts of the various organized groups. But many things essential to a well-governed community remain to be done, and will require attention during the present year.

STULL

Among these are: an equitable fiscal arrangement with the Federal Government; home rule for the District; establishment of a commission having jurisdiction over public utility matters throughout the Metropolitan Area; a new bridge across the Anacostia River; the overcrowded condition of the public schools; an investigation of the law enforcement agencies, and the Sesquicentennial celebration.

Perhaps a new and more realistic view of our city is necessary. It is very gratifying to contemplate our magnificent buildings, statues and parks, and it is important that the city make a favorable impression on its hundreds of thousands of visitors. It is far more important, however, that the welfare of the 800,000 persons who reside here be considered.

Our slum clearance program has bogged down; we do not boast of our crime record, and our local government can hardly be considered ideal. One of the most troublesome features of the local administration is the slow and laborious procedure that must be followed to obtain the enactment of legislation which practically everyone agrees is necessary.

As an example of this, Congress has refused to give us the right to determine for ourselves whether we desire daylight saving time. Each year we must go hat in hand to Congress.

When our "city councilmen," many of whom are entirely unfamiliar with local problems, come face to face with issues that cannot be put aside, they often vote to please their constituents, with little regard for the aspirations of Washington as a community.

Our Town Meetings

AS WE go into a new year, it is well to pause and reflect on the services of the various civic groups.

The impression may prevail that some of the matters discussed at these local meetings are unimportant, but to the residents of a neighborhood where lack of a stop sign has resulted in injury or death, an unprotected intersection becomes a major problem.

The citizen association movement is an offshoot of the old New England town meeting, where the first seeds of democracy were sown in the New World. Neighbors gathered to discuss matters of mutual interest, and from this in time grew self-governing communities.

The modern version of the town meeting is a meeting of the civic-minded men and women of one small section of the city. Whether these will grow into self-government for the District rests with the members of the House.

Democratic 'Pressure'

IT IS rather strange to hear that a member of Congress resents what he terms "high pressure tactics" by the advocates of home rule, calling attention to the location of a headquarters of this group near the Capitol. The halls of Congress are teeming with paid lobbyists who buttonhole Congressmen in the interest of legislation which inures to the benefit of private individuals.

The proponents of home rule are entitled to the constitutional right of petition, and when we plead for redress of our grievances it is a task made necessary by the failure of Congress to recognize that we are Americans, entitled to all the benefits of such citizenship as well as its burden of responsibilities.

The opening of a headquarters for those favoring home rule for the District cannot be regarded as pressure tactics. It is merely an effort to coordinate the efforts of the many at a central point where campaign material can be obtained. This is the democratic method. It is much to be preferred over parades and demonstrations, shouting and the carrying of banners.

In this connection, it is well to note that the Washington Board of Trade, which once used the slogan, "Americanize the Washingtonian," is doing its utmost to prevent a home rule measure from coming to the floor of the House.

HERE is a suggested New Year's resolution for the residents of the District: Resolved, That if I am called for jury duty during the coming year, I will not endeavor to avoid it but will gladly serve as a civic duty.

Bulky Agenda Faces Assembly

By Benjamin Muse

DELEGATES and State Senators—and lobbyists—are gathing in Richmond for a session of the General Assembly which will have far too much to do. All recent regular sessions of that body have had too much to do. The legislative business of modern Virginia is too heavy to be duly studied and acted upon in a single 60-day session every two years.

MUSE

The congestion at the session which will open Wednesday will probably be the worst yet, because there is an unprecedented mass of legislative proposals and because—owing to the activities incident to the change of Governors—there will be a minimum of time in which to deal with them. The decks will not really be cleared for work until after Battle's inauguration on January 18.

The problem of leaders will be one of selecting the "must" measures and inducing the two chambers to concentrate on them, to the exclusion, if need be, of a multitude of lesser projects. There will also be the usual separation of issues into those on which an organization "line" is established and those from which the organization hierachy stands aside and lets members "fight it out."

The organization, for instance, will insist upon the adoption of Battle's plan to make 57 million dollars immediately available for school construction, and it will doubtless resist any major change in the budget which Governor Tuck will take to the General Assembly on January 16. In the matter of teachers' salary raises, Tuck and Battle are expected to show unwonted liberality, and there is not likely to be serious opposition to their recommendation if it is liberal enough.

Divided Sentiment

ORGANIZATION leaders are believed to have frowned upon any plan for calling a State convention to repeal the poll tax, but differences of opinion within organization ranks may lead to a policy of letting matters take their course on this issue.

Last week, Norfolk State Senators Edward L. Breeden, jr., and Robert F. Baldwin, jr., hitherto staunch organization men, announced their intention of introducing a bill calling for a referendum on the question of calling a poll tax repeal convention.

Another project upon which the organization is likely to be divided is that of State Senator Harry F. Byrd, jr., for combining the functions of school boards with those of boards of supervisors.

On the question of the absent voters law, anything may happen. It will be thrown into focus at the opening of the session by the airing of alleged absentee vote frauds in Russell County in connection with the contest to determine whether John W. Fletcher should be seated in the House of Delegates as the representative of that county. Announcement of an intention to press for "absolute repeal" of the absent voters law came last week from no less reliable an organization man than State Senator Harry C. Stuart of Russell.

Few High Spots

ON THE negative side the organization will stand firm in repulsing a drive which is reputedly in the making to secure radical revision of Virginia's right to work law, and it will probably brush off any attack upon the Tuck election law as well as any sales tax proposal.

These are only a few of the high spots of the General Assembly's formidable agenda. The Virginia Advisory Legislative Council has submitted a series of important proposals, and the Duke Commission has made various recommendations, including a 52-million-dollar item for mental hospitals. The division of statutory research and drafting is working overtime preparing 95 separate bills to embody the 52 suggestions of the Tax Study Commission.

Finally there are the hundreds of minor projects, the bills to be introduced in lighter vein and the strictly screwball bills. Bills already announced as in the offing included one to compel William and Mary to play football with the University of Virginia and another to permit walking on the grass on the State Capitol grounds. There will be a bumper crop.

Maryland Affairs

It Can Be Dun Without Shouting

By James P. Connolly

ANYONE will tell you that taxes are too high. Now the tax men stand criticized for even raising their voices. State income tax investigators have been accused of trampling personal privacy by conducting interviews in loud tones.

CONNOLLY

The aggrieved have found a stout champion in Representative Edward T. Miller of the First District, on the Eastern Shore. He has raised the issue of reticence in a ringing outcry carrying across the bay to Annapolis.

"The State administration," he said, "is following in the footsteps of the Federal Government, giving publicity to the financial affairs of the people with needless embarrassment. In Easton, the investigator operates in a small room, often overcrowded, and those who appear are questioned in loud tones in the full hearing of others."

This being an election year and Representative Miller having been mentioned as a Republican possibility for Governor, his resentment has the rumble of campaign thunder. No complaints have come from anyone else. Nevertheless, his is interesting as it reflects on the tax collection problem.

"Many of those caught in the dragnet for inquisition are citizens of other States and only summer residents of Maryland," he says.

Such outsiders, of course, do not vote in Maryland, and the State has lost untold millions of dollars in revenue through inability to collect their taxes. During the war boom, particularly, the State suffered heavily through failure to collect personal income taxes.

Thousands of strangers and floaters were employed as war workers at high wages, but many never made State income tax returns and there were no State payroll deductions.

Lack the Machinery

THE big leak was plain enough and there was some demand for a deduction plan, but former State Comptroller Millard Tawes discouraged it on the good ground of impracticality. It would have required a far more elaborate system of bookkeeping than the State was equipped to attempt.

State tax administration during the war was rather lenient in other respects. Although the law provided fines and jail penalties for wilful violations, there was little machinery for enforcement and arrests seldom were made.

When the State administration changed in 1947, the new Comptroller, James J. Lacy, launched a campaign to tighten up tax enforcement. More flagrant cases of tax dodging were prosecuted and more pressure was put on delinquents.

The State set up a system of checking Federal returns against State returns. The check is made alphabetically. If there is no State return from a citizen who made a Federal return, the State wants to know why. Lists of such citizens have been made, and these are the ones being examined by the investigators of whom Representative Miller has complained.

There is one disadvantage to the check. It is necessarily a year behind the times, at least. So when the tax collector finally got around to the war workers, or where they had been, many of his birds had flown.

Nevertheless, the campaign for increased compliance and the collection of arrearages has more than paid off. The income tax division of the comptroller's office was reorganized by Walter Kennedy, now chief of the retail sales tax division. He reported recently that income tax collections increased more than 50 percent from 1946 to 1948. In the same two years the number of income tax returns filed increased from 246,000 to 365,000.

Even some of the former war workers have been tracked down and dunned successfully. Being out of State, little real pressure can be applied, but some have accepted their obligations voluntarily. Back taxes have been collected from delinquents as far away as Texas and California.

An Interstate Deal

IF A bill going into the Legislature at the coming session is adopted, more collections stand to be made. This is a reciprocity measure, giving Maryland the right to bring suit against tax delinquents in other States in return for giving other States the same privilege here.

Maryland already has such a law for the collection of inheritance taxes. The new bill applies to levies of all kinds.

The bill's chances could hardly be better. It was recommended to the Legislative Council by the comptroller's office and the council is recommending it to the Legislature. Further, many legislators resent Maryland's big tax loss during the war.

To the extent that taxes were ducked, a heavier burden was put on the home folks. It's possible that the war leak contributed to tax increases. If so, and getting back to Representative Miller's complaint, honest taxpayers might be willing to let the collector raise his voice a little, if the rates could be reduced.

MONTGOMERY COUNTY'S council-manager system of government will be one year old January 18, and it can certainly be termed a precocious infant.

McNAYR

The first year's work produced the "underpinning" of a solid structure, as County Council President Frederic P. Lee puts it, with "the superstructure to be added in coming months."

Opposing political leaders unite in praise of the council's efforts.

J. Bond Smith, Democratic State Central Committee chairman, said: "The conduct of county business has been greatly improved by the manner in which the council has conducted its public hearings."

He gave a lion's share of the credit for this to Lee, who, he said, has done "a wonderful job in procedurally improving the whole county setup."

Smith conceded that the council members have made mistakes, but "so did the former boards of commissioners, both Democratic and Republican," he said.

High Salaries Hit

STATE'S Attorney Walter W. Dawson, who doubles as chairman of the Republican State Central Committee, agreed that the council has smoothed out government operation, but he looked askance at what he termed the policy of "bringing in too many people at high salaries."

Personnel increases were also attacked by Wesley I. Sauter, member of the former Republican Board of Commissioners, in a debate with Col. Norman B. Ames, County Charter Committee president, last fall. Sauter accused the new government of "empire building, creating departments within departments." He cited the four-man county attorney's office as a prime example of payroll overloading.

This office is stoutly defended by Lee. He points to the considerable number of legal cases which the council inherited and the necessity of compiling under one cover the many ordinances which are to be found only in the minute books of former boards. The latter job alone requires the full time of one attorney, he said.

Colonel Ames also defends the legal staff, the most criticized of the county's new departmental setups. He cited a $42,000 saving resulting from legal study of a request for State aid for school construction last summer.

Payroll Slimmer

REPLYING to the "empire building" charge, county authorities point out that despite the addition of several new departments and functions, there are now only 430 full-time employes compared with 414 on January 1, 1949.

Ames termed the present council "the best government the county has ever had," adding, "and I'm afraid it's the best we'll have for a while."

The Charter Committee's worry now, according to its president, is "where to find seven able councilmen for 1950." The majority of the council members have stated definitely that they will not be candidates for reelection.

One of the most important accomplishments of the "charter" government, as it is popularly known, is the county's improved financial setup, according to Lee. A recent report on a survey made by Wainwright, Ramsey & Lancaster, New York municipal finance consultants, found the county "sound" financially, its credit position "secure," and that the care being given to planning of needed improvements provides "ample assurance it will be maintained on a sound basis."

Part of the credit must be given to the preceding Republican Board of Commissioners, Lee said. It stopped refunding bond issues when due, a practice followed by earlier Democratic regimes, he pointed out.

One of the council's first acts was to prepare a five-year capital budget program, embodying school construction, road improvements and construction of a badly needed county building to house functions now occupying rented quarters.

Zoning Handbook

THE shaping of a permanent zoning policy is another important achievement, in Lee's opinion. A compilation of all zoning decisions by the council, together with zoning ordinances, was prepared by John D. McElroy, clerk to the council, for the use of zoning applicants and the public generally. It sets up the zoning procedure and policy followed by the council in its capacity as District Council for the Maryland-Washington Regional District.

Lee also points with pride to the steps taken to enforce ordinances dealing with zoning, permits and licenses. For years, he says, the county has been accepting fees for permits and licenses without providing any services in return. A vigorous program by the department of inspection and licenses will remedy this, he adds.

The establishment of the Appeal Tax Court is another forward step, Lee believes. This agency, he pointed out, is free from any pressure by county officials in arriving at decisions on assessment complaints by property owners. When the county commissioners handled such complaints, there was much criticism of "political" rulings.

The council also instituted the practice of summoning key county officials to public sessions for discussion of their work. One result of this device was the overhauling of the justice of the peace setup following complaints by police heads, together with their recommendations for the system now in force.

Letting It Stand

ALTHOUGH the charter is admittedly not perfect, no major revisions are planned at next May's legislative session of the council, Lee said. He pointed out, however, that all citizens have the right to propose charter amendments and local laws at that time.

Minor inadequacies of the charter which have been suggested for amendment include elimination of the provision requiring council approval of all employes hired by the county manager, and more flexibility in the regulations governing transfer of budgetary funds within or between departments.

There are several phases of the county government which the council president feels have not progressed as rapidly as they should have. He feels particularly strong on the subject of public relations. There is too little understanding of the functions of the various branches by county employes, he said.

"Too often a citizen, attempting to obtain certain information or assistance, is referred to an improper office or brushed off merely because the employe does not know in what office that assistance can be obtained," he said.

A remedy for this, he believes, would be to establish a central information desk.

The Winning Points

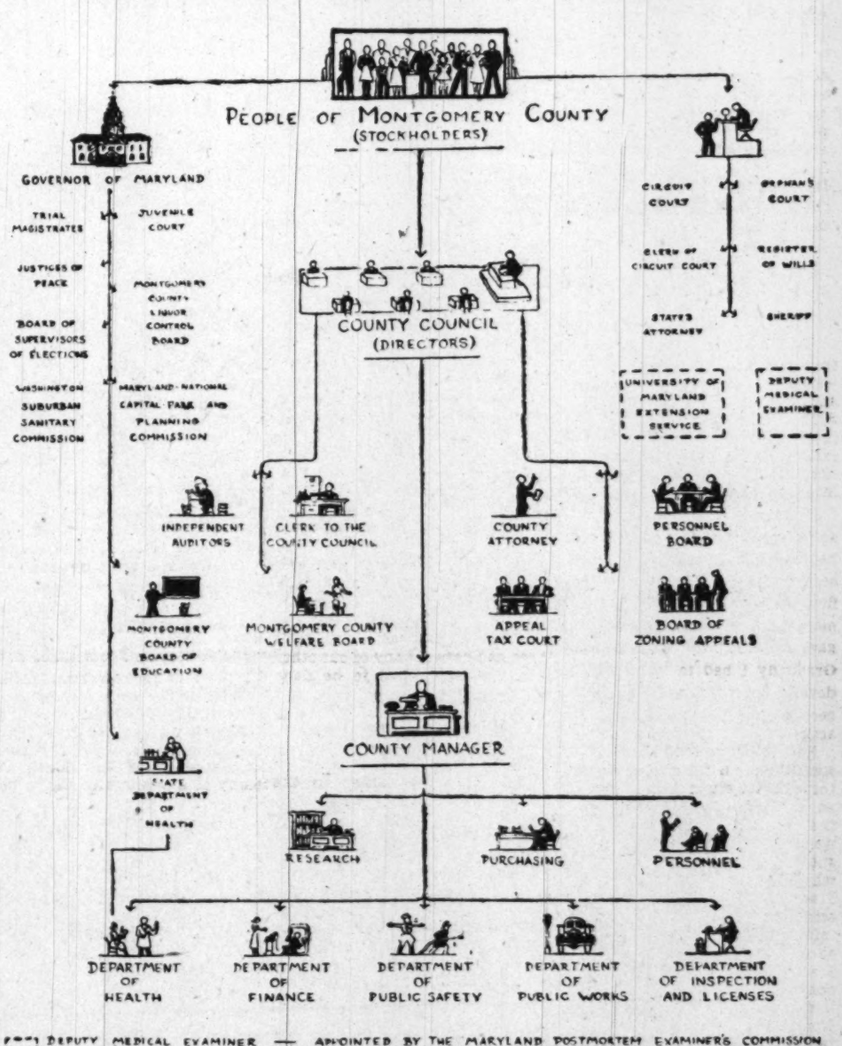
THE question arises why the charter movement was successful in 1948 after its failure in 1944 when the same questions were paramount. In both years the issues were nonpartisan elections and council-manager rule as opposed to the traditional two-party system and government by county commissioners.

The significant differences between the 1944 and 1948 charters, according to charter leaders, were the removal of department heads from civil service classification and the inclusion of salaries for council members in the second one.

Many observers feel, however, that, like all major changes, the charter movement had to come gradually. They feel that the public was just "not ready" to accept the new governmental form the first time it was offered.

Conception of the charter movement dates back to 1942, when Allen H. Gardner, a lawyer living at 1515 Dale dr., Silver Spring, was elected first president of the charter committee. Gardner, still active in charter affairs, is generally accorded the title of "father of the charter movement."

How County Business Is Managed



The charter committee has been headed by Colonel Ames since 1947. A member of the engineering faculty of George Washington University, he lives at 8 Westwood dr., Westmoreland Hills.

Republican Sweep

THE first charter, drafted in 1943, was defeated at the polls in 1944 by slightly more than 1000 votes. Two years later, county voters approved by a 3000 majority the election of another charter board to prepare a second charter.

This charter, the one now in effect, was approved in 1948 in a general repudiation of the well-oiled Democratic machine which swept Republicans into most county offices.

In an exceedingly quiet election January 6, 1949, following a campaign marked by a hands-off attitude by both political parties, the seven candidates indorsed by the charter committee easily defeated three independents.

A home-rule feature of the charter is the annual legislative session in May at which local laws are enacted. This gives the council many legislative perquisites formerly the province of the State General Assembly.

Thirty-three local laws were enacted at the first session, one of which was later killed by the council through its veto powers.

McNayr's Burden

A LARGE part of the council's first year was spent in organizing and staffing. It was not until late October that the last key positions were filled with the appointment of a director of inspection and licenses and a fire marshal. Until then, the functions of these offices were added responsibilities of County Manager Irving G. McNayr, who exercises over-all supervision of all branches of government.

Many subordinate jobs are still vacant, however, and the county personnel board, an independent agency headed by Lewis B. Sims of 6513 Brennon le., Chevy Chase, has been conducting an intensive recruiting program.

The board, through Personnel Director Ben Hall, is asking colleges and technical schools throughout the country for the names of qualified candidates in addition to the customary practice of advertising job examinations.

All county jobs except department heads are under a merit system and no employe can be discharged except for cause.

In a recent report to the charter committee, Council President Lee declared that the council's nonpartisan character is responsible for the county's obtaining high caliber employes.

"We don't have to keep folks on the payroll because they can turn out the votes," he said. "Instead, we are able to hire the best technical experts."

Public service is the prime objective of the Charterites, he said, "not keeping a political party in power."

Justice Frankfurter Eulogizes Willmott Lewis in Broadcast

Supreme Court Justice Frankfurter broadcast over BBC last week in memory of Sir Willmott Lewis, London Times correspondent, who died here Wednesday. Justice Frankfurter's remarks follow:

In Sir Wilmott Lewis the style was the man even unto death. From a gay luncheon he went peacefully to sleep forever. Thus his exit was like his performance, decisive and complete. There was no waste, no ambiguity, no tapering-off. His dramatic quality was not an artifact. It was a rich nature's response to the complexity and mystery and drollery of life. A critical but not a cynical nature, a fondness for his fellows despite their frailties, a deep sense of the august march of history, a disciplined gift for pithy and lucid writing, enabled him to discharge with distinction his great public function for more than a quarter century.

Public function, not public office. In both the United Kingdom and the United States the press has profound constitutional importance. For the business of the press is promotion of truth and wisdom regarding public matters by furnishing the basis for understanding of them. Since the reporting of events and the elucidation of their meaning are the task of correspondents, they may fairly be said to exercise a function not unlike that of judges in ferreting out the truth from treacherous evidence and presenting it in fair balance and with clarity.

Especially is this the task of one who is charged with informing the British people regarding American affairs through the most influential medium of the British press. The Washington correspondent of the Times is not only a source of vital information for British readers of what goes on in America. Inevitably, through fruitful personal relations, or the want of them, with those who influence American thought, he serves as an important hyphen between British affairs and their effective understanding in the United States.

Nimble as was his wit and skeptical as was his mind, Lewis never forgot that he was exercising his faculties in the service of a truer understanding among English-speaking peoples, one with another. He was wholly true to the truth-seeking and truth-speaking functions of a journalist. Of course the position of the Washington correspondent of the Times is one of great influence, but not necessarily for good. Willmott Lewis' influence was, I believe, overwhelmingly for good.

Only wide reading and much reflection, detachment of spirit and sympathetic understanding of the complexities of America could have written the dispatches which came from his pen during all those years from Washington. On occasion he would write short essays on complicated American problems of constitutional law, like the two pieces that he wrote by way of background to the so-called Court fight in 1937, that could not be improved upon by an American specialist.

The light of one who was born to charm has gone out, and the Washington scene will be much poorer without him. But he has set journalistic standards that can be departed from only at the peril of true understanding even among peoples who know each other as well as do the British and the Americans.

State Dept. Has New Legislative 'Helmsman'

By Gershon Fishbein
Post Reporter

AS Congress convened last week, the State Department was busy on several important projects requiring legislative approval. Point IV, the International Trade Organization, extension of military assistance and continuance of foreign economic aid are a few of the high-priority items on the agenda.

In addition, the Administration's China policy and how it fits into the global pattern is certain to require exhaustive explanation to an economy-minded and somewhat hostile Congress.

Although the legislators will expect an explanation from no less than Secretary Acheson, the man who will steer the department's pet projects is Jack K. McFall, a 44-year-old veteran of many a congressional scrap but a comparative newcomer to diplomacy.

McFall's title is Assistant Secretary of State for Congressional Relations, a position created in the days of the GOP-controlled Eightieh Congress. Lacking effective liasion with a vindictive Congress, the department took a beating on many of its legislative proposals and in the House Appripriations Committee.

Department officials realized that something more than an occasional appearance by the Secretary or counselor was required to put across important foreign-policy legislation. The new assistant secretarship was the result.

JACK K. McFALL
. . . Strictly nonpartisan

Maps Own Course

THE DUTIES of the office are vague. and purposely so. It was intended that the Assistant Secretary should develop contacts in his own way and with an eye to his own background and experience. Perhaps a luncheon with a Senator or Representative in the Capitol Restaurant could do more for the department than an appearance at a hearing; perhaps an invitation to sit in on a policy discussion would be a more effective method of changing a Senator's mind about pending legislation.

This great latitude makes extraordinary demands on a man's background. For example, the First Assistant Secretary for Congressional Relations was Ernest Gross, a man with wide acquaintance in the State Department and public life but without much contact with Congress. McFall's experience is the opposite.

Appointed last October, McFall brings to the office only 2½ years' experience as a foreign service officer, but he has had 18 years on the Hill, including 15 years on the staff of the House Appropriations Committee, where the State Department has encountered some of its heaviest opposition. Between 1933 and 1941 he specialized on State Department budgets.

Bipartisan Backing

ALTHOUGH McFall says he is more concerned with steering foreign policy legislation than with appropriations, observers believe Acheson will draw on his experience and personal contacts with the Appropriations Committee when the fiscal going gets rough. Representative Cannon (D., Mo.), chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, recommended McFall's appointment; Representative Taber (R., N. Y.), long a terror to the department, indorsed McFall, his friend of 20 years.

It is on this bipartisan basis that McFall hopes to help the department. He feels that foreign affairs are complex enough without the element of politics.

"When you are serving abroad in the Diplomatic Corps, nothing is more important to you than the knowledge that you speak for a united country," he says.

McFall's nonpolitical approach goes back to 1928, when he was appointed to the House Appropriations Committee staff by Representative Will Wood (R., Ind.). Such appointments, then as now, were on a nonpolitical basis. Previously, he had been secretary to Senator Robinson (R., Ind.).

He served under the Hoover, Roosevelt and Truman Administrations, always steering clear of politics. It might also be noted that he has never voted in voteless Washington since he was 19.

A Boyhood Dream

WHEN he came to Washington in 1924 to attend the George town University School of Foreign Service, it was a dream coming true for McFall.

"When other kids talked about becoming streetcar conductors or firemen, I dreamed of joining the foreign service," he recalls.

This ambition, however, was not fully realized until February, 1947, when he was appointed special assistant to the foreign service director.

McFall joined the staff of Senator Robinson in 1925 more out of necessity than design. He needed a job that would allow him to continue his studies at night. When he graduated from Georgetown in 1929, he held onto his job with the House committee, where he had transferred in 1928. He did get closer to foreign affairs in 1933, when a vacancy enabled him to specialize on State Department budgets.

In 1936, after a trip to Germany with committee members, he returned to Washington on Tuesday and applied for a naval commission on Wednesday, so convinced was he that we would soon be at war.

It was during the war that McFall had his first taste of diplomacy in action. He served as senior Navy representative at Sierre Leone, Africa, on delicate relations with the British and French. For his work he was awarded citations by Secretary Forrestal and Rear Admiral Thomas B. Inglis, Chief of Naval Intelligence.

Later he was named first assistant naval attache at Ottawa, serving until 1946, when he returned to the House committee as executive secretary.

Up From Consul

M'FALL was First Secretary and Consul at Athens when he was recalled to Washington last October for "consultation." It proved to be his appointment as assistant secretary.

One of his first acts was to announce to Congressmen that he would be solely responsible for getting a prompt answer to any request for information.

"I know from experience," he says, "that Congressmen, like other callers, are irked when they are put on a merry-go-round when they try to get legitimate information."

McFall believes in consultation between individual Congressmen and responsible department officials, including the Secretary. He feels that this principle is more important this year than ever before, since some 150 Congressmen have been abroad in the past three months and have come back with their own observations and opinions. Rumblings have already been heard from these sources.

The opposition doesn't scare McFall. His congressional experience has made him philosophical.

"We've had many a battle on our committee," he explains. "Yet the bills finally get out, compromises are made and no hard feelings grow out of it.

"Opposition is part of the democratic system. The time to start worrying is when there is no opposition."

After 11 changes of address in the past 3½ years—an occupational hazard of diplomacy—McFall and his wife now live at 2744 32d st. nw.

'It Took Me Longer to Gain Independence'

from the fact that his mother had wanted to direct his every thought and deed and that he had had to fight for independence. It was the result of an almost exaggerated feeling on his part that he would not subject his sons to similar interference.

It took me much longer to gain some measures of independence because I had had so much insecurity in my young life. At first the sense of security that my mother-in-law and my husband gave me made me very grateful. Gradually I had to learn that, to develop, an individual must have a certain freedom of thought and action.

Because of the long and slow and sometimes painful process I went through to attain this independence, I was almost obsessed with the idea that, once the children were grown, they should not be subject to the kind of control which had held such sway over me. I am afraid my daughters-in-law sometimes though I was not even interested in them because I was so very anxious to have them feel I was not in any way trying to control or interfere with their lives or trying to demand attention from my children once they had families of their own. I probably carried this theory too far and perhaps still do at times.

With Franklin, the feeling became a plan of action. Later, as he grew busier in his public life, he found it impossible to take time for the boys' interests. This kept them from asking for advice they might have sought had he been freer to give it.

One after the other, James and Elliott learned through bitter experience, and it was bitter disillusionment as well.

Elliott did not go to college because he disliked his years at Groton so much. He was kept there because my mother-in-law and Franklin believed the discipline was valuable even if distasteful, while my mother-in-law did not want to break tradition. As a result he went at an even earlier age than James into earning a living and had a harder time in consequence.

No Real Roots

THE BOYS' early marriages came about largely because they were not really rooted in any particular home and were looking to establish homes of their own. That added to their need to make money quickly. I quite understand their dissatisfaction.

They loved Hyde Park but, partly because my husband could never quite decide to make the break with his mother and build a home of our own, and partly because he loved the old house so much, we always lived with my mother-in-law at Hyde Park. I had no feeling that it belonged to me; and while the children felt the place belonged to them and were completely at home there, they did not feel tied to it by any responsibility.

It is hard to make children feel, either in the Governor's Mansion in Albany or in the White House, that they are living in a home of their own, and we spent only a few short years in our New York City house. When we lived there they were too young to have much feeling about it, and after 1928 we never all lived there again for any length of time.

After we went to Washington in 1913, we lived in two different houses which we rented furnished, but they were not a home except in the sense that home is wherever the family lives together. I think our children never acquired the roots which some children are fortunate enough to have in a feeling of attachment to a particular piece of land or a particular house.

Perhaps it is well at this point to clear up a story which has come back to me at various times: that our youngest son, John, was a conscientious objector and a pacifist and did not want to go into the service. Like every other young man I know, John did not think, in the years before the war was upon us, that he was anxious to go to war. He was working hard and getting on well, and his own life absorbed him. Once we were at war, however, there never was any question for him, any more than there had been for any of our other sons. Whatever had to be done for the war had to be done, and none of them dreamed of being a conscientious objector or pacifist.

By Appointment

AS LIFE grew busier in the White House, my husband had less and less time for family affairs, and I can remember how resentful the boys were when they found they actually had to make an appointment to see their father if they wanted to talk to him privately.

On one occasion one of our sons had something he felt was important to talk over with his father, so he made an appointment. My husband was always kind and gentle, and while our son talked he seemed to be listening, though he was reading a document he held in his hand. The boy asked if he heard him. His father answered, "Yes." But when there was a pause in the talk he looked up and handed the boy the paper he was holding and remarked, "This is a most important document. I should like to have your opinion on it." I imagine that seemed like a slap in the face to his son, who thought that what he was talking about was more important than anything else in the world. He took the paper, commented on it and left the room.

A very indignant young man came to me saying, "Never again will I try to talk to father about anything personal." It took me a long while before I could bring him to understand that he had happened to strike a wrong moment and that he would have to try again when conditions were more auspicious. I pointed too that his father had paid him a great compliment in asking his opinion on a matter of importance to the country.

I can remember another occasion which was entirely characteristic of my husband. One of our sons was going through a crisis in his personal life, and both his father and I were anxious to keep him from following a certain course on which he was determined. My husband asked me to telephone the boy, which I did. I returned to Franklin's study expecting to find him breathlessly awaiting the results of my conversation. Indeed he was deeply engrossed in going over a letter. If I remember rightly it was the first peace note to all the nations, including for the first time the Soviet Union. When he looked up I told him that I had been entirely unsuccessful. His face clouded for a moment, and then he said: "Well, we cannot help it. Do you want to hear my first peace note to the nations?"

Franklin always accepted the inevitable and went on to important things in hand. Philosophically this was right, but at the time I think it made the children feel that he was not so deeply interested in their concerns as they felt he should be.

Now, years later, I find that those difficulties which were so hard to bear at the time no longer seem important to the boys or to Anna, who had her troubles in other ways. They now recognize the things that were important; their perspective and sense of values have changed, and I think their father as a public man means more to them today than he did in their earlier years.

Price of Office

PERHAPS you will think I have gone into a great deal of very frank detail about our family affairs and the personal life of the family. I have done so with a purpose, because I sometimes wonder whether the American public—which encourages the press to give it the kind of information that really delves into the private lives of public servants and their families—realizes how much the family of a public man has to pay in lack of privacy for the fact that he is willing to serve his country in an elective or an appointive office.

In addition, I doubt if they realize the price that the whole family pays in curtailment of opportunity to live a close family life. Much has to be sacrificed by all to the public interest, and there is little or no personal compensation for the members of the family. There is, of course, pride in the man's achievement and gratitude if he is able to help his countrymen and the world. Love is usually selfish, but when sufficiently disciplined a family may be glad that a man has the opportunity to fulfill his heart's desire, and they will work with him in every way they can to help achieve his objectives. But something of the personal relationship must be lost. It is the price paid for a life spent almost entirely in public service.

After leaving the law office of Carter, Ledyard and Milburn in 1910, and up to the time of his illness in 1921, Franklin had been more or less continuously in public life. He had been elected State Senator from our rock-ribbed Republican district and had been active in the Democratic National Convention which nominated Woodrow Wilson for his first term, attracting enough attention so that in the spring of 1913 he was appointed Assistant Secretary of the Navy. He was well qualified for the job, since the Navy was one of his main interests.

Franklin and Secretary Josephus Daniels made a good team. Secretary Daniels was older and more experienced politically and in his relations with Congress could do what Franklin could never have done, while Franklin in his relations with the Navy could provide a background and knowledge that Secretary Daniels did not have. The Navy Department gave Franklin his first close contact with labor and provided for the future a good basis of understanding.

At one time Franklin ran in the New York State primaries for United States Senator and was defeated, and in 1920 he was nominated for Vice President with Mr. James M. Cox at the San Francisco convention. That campaign was fought mainly on the issue of the League of Nations, for President Wilson's tragic illness had come about as a result of his efforts to bring that issue before the country.

After this defeat Franklin went into business in New York City.

An Outside Interest

WHEN Mr. Edward Bok offered his peace award in 1923, Franklin submitted a paper on organization for peace.

The writing of this peace plan was largely something to keep Franklin's interest alive in outside matters during the first years of adjustment, when it would have been easy for him to become a self-centered invalid. However, it served a more far-reaching purpose, since it was the basis on which he built other plans for world peace in later years. His original plan aimed at remedying the defects that had actually been revealed in the functioning of the League of Nations. Later he brought this draft up to date.

In January of the year following Alfred E. Smith's 1924 victory, Franklin became a partner in Mr. D. Basil O'Connor's law firm. The firm became Roosevelt and O'Connor, an association that continued until March 3, 1933. However, from 1924 to 1928, Franklin devoted a good part of his time to finding out how far he could recover from infantile paralysis. The disease had attacked him in 1921 while he was on the Island of Campobello in the province of New Brunswick, Canada, off the coast of Maine. His hands and arms as well as his legs had become partially paralyzed. The use of his hands and arms came back completely and he developed, because he used them so constantly, broad shoulders and strong arms, but his legs remained useless.

Little by little, through exercise and wearing braces, he learned to walk, first with crutches and then with a cane and someone's arm to lean on. The first braces were heavy; later lighter ones were made. However, for the rest of his life he was unable to walk or stand without the braces and some help, though he could still swim and play water polo.

Franklin's illness was a blessing in disguise, for it gave him strength and courage he had not had before. He had to think out the fundamentals of living and learn the greatest of all lessons—infinite patience and never-ending persistence.

People often have asked me how I felt myself about his illness. To tell the truth, I do not think I ever stopped to analyze my feelings. There was so much to do to manage the household and the children and to try to keep things running smoothly that I never had any time to think of my own reactions. I simply lived from day to day and got through the best I could.

THE REV. WALTER C. HOOK WITH ONE OF HIS DEER
. . . no matter how you sliced it, one animal wasn't enough

By Aubrey Graves

HUNTING season's over. And now, for a spell, we rural folk will be absorbed in our "hot stove farming" and will be wondering how come there's such a difference between the pictures in the seed catalogs and the things actually grown in the Old Dominion soil.

We won't quickly forget, however, the hunting season just passed—nor the "modern miracle" it produced!

The Rev. Walter C. Hook, who ministers to the spiritual needs of the good Methodists of Fairfax, Burke and Pender, is our shootin' Parson who has a care for our more earthly requirements as well.

Recently, he went deer hunting in Sussex County. Some of his non-clerical companions hunted for two days without any luck but our beloved preacher got his animal right off.

"More blessed to give than to receive," the Good Book says. So the benevolent Parson, who practices what he preaches, started inviting members of his three flocks to partake of his prize.

He wasn't prepared for the 300 acceptances he got! One deer, no matter how you slice it, just doesn't add up to that much meat.

Moses and Elijah

PERHAPS, at this point, Mr. Hook remembered how the ravens fed hungry Elijah on his mountain top, or how the followers of Moses in their hour of need were supplied with manna from Heaven.

At any rate, without more ado, he announced to Mrs. Hook that he would set forth next morning for another assault on the forest. From that equally pious lady, he got an indulgent smile. He made some hurried telephone calls, looking for company, but found no takers on such short notice.

So, into the family car he hopped and hit for the woods of Caroline County, where his friend, Roscoe Beasley, lives. Maybe Roscoe would feel like hunting. But Mr. Beasley was ailing and couldn't go along. Furthermore, he wasn't optimistic.

"How do you figure to get another deer?" he asked. "Why, man, you don't know how lucky you were to get ONE. Some people been down here every weekend without even getting a shot."

The pastor allowed that he'd try anyway, if it was all right.

"Okay, take your dogs and go along . . ."

But he hadn't brought any dogs.

"Parson," said Mr. Beasley, "you've got either a passel of presumption, or a powerful lot of faith!"

A Convert Won

MR. HOOK proceeded alone into the woods, hunted half an hour. At a spot where he'd gotten a deer on a previous occasion, he sat down on a log to rest.

And then—on the word of a minister of the Gospel—it happened. A buck plunged out of a thicket and stopped, just long enough. The animal was dressed on the spot.

On his way out, the Minister stopped to thank his host—who blinked and made a vow forthwith to go into town and join the Methodist Church.

The parson brought the carcass back to the frozen locker plant in Fairfax and prepared the two bucks for the feast.

And that is how more than 300 "renewed believers" enjoyed a venison dinner in the basement of the Fairfax Methodist Church last Thursday night. The Methodist ladies brought home-baked pies to top off the meal.

More than one diner recalled the miracles of the loaves and the fishes and the water that was turned into wine at the wedding in Cana. Said another: "Brother Hook, maybe you thought you were hunting by yourself . . . but obviously, you were NOT!"

In Winter Each Bloom Must Count

Skill at Flower Grouping Put to Real Test Now

By Katherine Poser

IN WINTER with a scarcity of flowers in the average budget-bound household, a knowledge of flower arrangement becomes doubly important. In summer we can be careless with our blooms and follow the Colonials with their masses of flowers, but in winter each bloom must count and a knowledge of flower arrangement teaches us this.

We in America have adapted from the Orientals their type of flower placement and have more or less created for ourselves the lovely line arrangements which place such stress on line and balance. These two types of arrangement can be lovely with no flowers at all, relying only on the arrangement of green material.

In one of the large flower shows last spring the most-discussed arrangement, perhaps, was a lovely silver Pandora's box out of which spilled in charming array masses of succulents of tones of gray and green. It made a restful beautiful picture.

At the Potomac Rose Show, when roses were at their peak, a blue ribbon winner contained only three perfect specimens of Peace rose with its own foliage and buds. These three blooms were so beautifully placed that the picture they made was perfect.

At a recent dahlia show in New York in a class with the highest competition, the blue ribbon winner contained only three medium-sized dahlias.

Sprays of Hemlock

EVERGREENS can play an important part in the making of winter arrangements. Several sprays of hemlock or yew can be so placed that with the inclusion of three or more flowers there can be an arrangement which will delight the eye.

Gladiolus, always a favorite in both house and garden, are most attractive in winter time, for a few stalks can be used in many ways to make a handsome decoration.

Roses and carnations, too, lend themselves to winter-time use. A few pink carnations against a background of the boxed heather now being sold in the stores makes a charming combination. This heather which is very expensive, lasts well and can be used in many ways.

The stress is on line and balance

We can look to our gardens for many things which will furnish a background for a few flowers from the florists. Honeysuckle foliage lends itself to almost any style of arrangement. Rhododendron and magnolia leaves can be used alone or with fruits and berries to make handsome displays. Berried shrubs bring color and charm in combination either with foliage, fruit or flowers.

At the fall show of the Flower Section of the Women's Club of Belle Haven, the winning dining room table entry used wide leafed evergreens to outline a table mirror at the corners of which were placed clusters of green grapes and pyracanthus berries. The centerpiece was an arrangement of fruits and pyracanthus in a tall compote. The silver candlesticks were also wreathed in evergreen foliage each with its decorative clusters of grapes and pyracanthus.

New Containers

WINTER is a good time to search out new containers and try using things which haven't been considered before. When successful, it is a good idea to make a note on your calendar so that when next year comes the same effect can be tried again. We are apt to forget our containers when they are put away and to mislay flower-holders.

To make arrangement more easy, it is well to have a special place for our flower things. A flower closet with its own sink is, of course, the ideal thing, but few of us can have this, but a box with all the gadgets needed in arrangement can be kept to move to the sink when we get to work. In it should be holders, modeling clay, string, scissors and wire.

Many local garden club members are planning to attend the School of Arrangements, Horticulture and Judging for Amateur Shows which is being held in Fredericksburg January 24 and 25.

This school is being conducted by Mrs. Henry M. Kistner of Long Island, who has spoken many times to Washington Garden Clubs and is sponsored by the Rappahannock Valley Garden Club.

It will cover horticulture and judging specimens by point scoring, flower show practice and judging both artistic and horticultural, flower arrangements and color and judging color. Mrs. George Benoit of Snowden Farm, Fredericksburg, is chairman.

Science Now Calls the Shots on Earthquakes

By John J. O'Neill

AN experiment was made early last August by announcing, for the rest of the year, dates when conditions in the earth would favor the release of forces causing earthquakes. Now the results of the experiment are examined and found interesting enough to encourage a similar experiment for 1950.

Ten dates indicating energy-releasing periods were announced. They covered 140 days, giving an average interval of 14 days between dates. Against these dates were checked the announcements by seismological observations of major earthquakes anywhere in the world.

Seventeen such announcements were made. Three of the earthquakes occurred on announced dates; three occurred one day before or after these dates; eight occurred on the second day preceding or following the dates; and one on the seventh day following. The last was the Tokyo earthquake, one of the very severe type that is a law unto itself.

On the basis of a random distribution of earthquakes, these events could have occurred on any of the 14 days in each interval, but 14 out of the total of 17 occurred two days or less from the given dates, and that is not a random distribution.

An indication that this clustering is not due entirely to coincidence may be found in the advance announcement. It said that on August 20 conditions would start which would "build up to an excellent triggering situation by August 24" and that "ripe earthquake strains in the Tropical and north temperate zones would be most influenced." A severe earthquake took place August 21 in the Pacific near the coast of Canada.

For the most recent date, December 19, the August announcement stated that conditions would exist at that time that would "cause maximum effects to be exerted in the Southern Hemisphere." The four earthquakes that took place in that period were clustered around South America. On December 17 two earthquakes occurred in the far South Pacific, one of them on the tip end of South America, and on December 21 two earthquakes took place in the Caribbean region.

To Whom It May Concern:

BUCK NEWSOM is wearing a Washington uniform again, but Manager Bucky Harris is not alarmed. Newsom is clad in the Nats' livery only because he is an instructor at their baseball school in Cocoa, Fla. . . . When Clark Griffith went into the annual stockholders' meeting of the Washington club, he had barely over 50 percent control but knew where he could get more proxies . . . the unannounced dividend to be voted by the Nats' board of directors to the stockholders is $2 per share, half of the value of the dividends voted in 1948-49, and it will be taken out of surplus inasmuch as the club failed to show a profit on its operations last season . . . John J. Jachym's share of the dividends will be $15,702, which will be helpful in paying the interest on his loan of $400,000 with which he bought 40.4 percent of the Nats' stock . . . Clark Griffith bid as high as $100,000 for Gerry Priddy, the second baseman he sold to the Browns for $25,000 two seasons before, until convinced that the Tigers were determined to outbid him . . . among those Washington players who will get a salary cut in their 1950 Washington contracts are Pitcher Joe Haynes, Griffith's son-in-law . . . Fred Baxter, brother of the late Frankie Baxter, will succeed him in the post of equipment manager of the Nats . . . Johnny Jachym, disappointed at his failure to get an important post with the Nats, will return to the operation of his Jamestown, N. J., factory which manufactures automatic guards for the protection of operators of punch presses.

KYLE ROTE, Southern Methodist U. star who almost upset Notre Dame, is acclaimed the most modest athlete in S. M. U. history. Despite playing a tremendous game against Oregon, Rote failed to show up around the SMU Athletic department for several days because "he missed one easy block and was ashamed to show his face." . . . Turk Edwards, successively all-league tackle, assistant coach, head coach, temporary vice-president and line coach, will fade from the Redskin picture in March. A History of the Royal and Ancient Golf Club reports it to be the original Dutch name for golf, later known as "kolf" before the game was exported to Scotland, which has always been recognized as the birthplace of the sport . . . and the word "tee" is a derivative of the Dutch "tuitje" (pronounced toytee) which means a small heap of sand . . . Max Houck of Seattle holed out his tee shot, but didn't get an ace. His first drive was out of bounds.

IF NAVY SIGNS Eddie Erdelatz of the San Francisco Forty-Niners, it will own the only head coach in college football who owns a pair of caulifower ears. They are Erdelatz's souvenirs of his college boxing days when he was the No. 1 heavyweight at St. Mary's . . . the high suspicion is that National League Football Commissioner Bert Bell is spoofing the Buffalo citizens who are believing they will be accepted for a berth in the league. Baltimore, for one, will vote to keep Buffalo out, fearing the Colts may be cast in a weaker, nonattractive division of the league if more teams are admitted . . . Ted Kluszewski, the Reds' rookie first baseman who twice led the South Atlantic League in hitting, is one of baseball's most unbelievable characters. He never picked up a glove until he decided to try the game while studying at the University of Indiana . . . now vacationing at Tropical Park is a former jockey of distinction. He is Roscoe Goose, who had the leg up on Donerail, the Kentucky Derby winner of 1913. Donerail paid 91 to 1, biggest winning price in the history of the Derby . . . Dick Wakefield was rescued from a 25 percent salary cut, the maximum permitted, when he was traded to the Yankees by the Tigers who were prepared to slash him the limit in view of his .206 batting average of last season.

IF JOE LOUIS FIGHTS Ezzard Charles for the title next summer, he will get not only his share of the purse, but 10 percent of Charles' purse under the agreement by which he abdicated his heavyweight title last year . . . Fred Kirsch, German army captain in World War I, who brought Max Schmeling to this country and stayed to become an American citizen, is sailing for Europe next week to scout up another contender . . . Jimmy Bronson, former manager of Gene Tunney, declares that Welterweight Champion Ray Robinson is the greatest fighter of the last 30 years. Caps Turn It On Waterloo, Win, 101-83

The Washington Caps followed the formula of a good mile-runner last night, fast first half, slower third quarter, and then an all-out finish, to defeat the Waterloo Hawks, 101-83.

The Caps rolled up a 54-42 halftime lead, got only 10 points in the third quarter to lead, 64-56, but packed 37 into the final period to win going away.

A crowd of 1582 saw the only local appearance of the National Basketball League's Western Division Iowa Hawks.

Bones McKinney was the hot shot in the first half, hitting from all angles as he scored 16 of his 17 points. Bones made good on 6 of his 12 attempts from the floor.

Nichols High With 19

His performance gained him runner-up honors among the locals as Jack Nichols showed the way with 19 points. Dick Mehen, the N.B.A.'s fifth leading scorer, and rookie Don Boven paced the Hawks with 18 points each.

The Hawks threw a slight scare into the Caps with six quick points early in the second quarter to pull back into contention at 41-36. Nichols, however, tossed in two fast shots for the Caps put them ahead 45-36.

Nichols got two more and McKinney a basket and foul, later in the period after Stan Patrick and Dick Mehen had countered for Waterloo. Chick Reiser netted one to put the Caps ahead, 54-39, before Bobby Tough and Mehen connected, just as the half ended, 54-42.

Gilmur Gets 12

Chuck Gilmur turned up the hot shot of the fourth quarter, getting most of his points in the late Cap surge.

Nichols sank a foul shot to put the score at 99-81 and then John "Hook" Dillon sent the Caps over the century mark with the tap-in.

Romulo Scores Hit At Touchdown Club

By Bus Ham
Post Reporter

Carlos P. Romulo, president of the General Assembly of the United Nations, was a fast little guy on his feet orally last night before a packed house at the Touchdown Club's fifteenth annual banquet in the Hotel Statler.

Romulo, as the principal speaker, was adept at changing his pace from a light vein to a serious side.

He quipped that he has two types of speeches. One, the kind made at the United Nations assemblies, which touch on nothing in particular, and, two, the bra type, that touches only the high spots.

Before he warmed up to the serious part of his remarks, which brought a standing ovation, he said that he had hurried down from Lake Success—which is neither a lake nor success yet—to address the Touchdowners.

Then he said that the Touchdown Club's banquet glorifies American manhood as a rampart of peace, and drove home many a point on the greatness of America's freedom and what freedom has meant to his native Phillipines.

John R. Steelman, assistant to President Truman, immortalized Jim Thorpe, old Carlisle Indian star, as the greatest of American athletes, and awarded Thorpe a scroll.

Gus Welch, of Eastern High School, and a teammate of Thorpe's at Carlisle, called on the Touchdown Club and its guests to "start a movement right here and now to get back Thorpe's Olympic medals."

Thorpe was the all-around hero of the 1912 Olympic but his medals were taken from him because he had accepted money for playing baseball.

Other awards were made to:

Kyle Rote, Southern Methodist University halfback, as the outstanding 1949 individual performer in college circles, with Speaker

Hogan Has 69, Ties for Third Place With 142

By Bob Myers

Los Angeles, Jan. 7 (AP).—Ben Hogan moved his comeback campaign into contention today, but he was still five strokes off the pace at the midway mark of the $15,000 Los Angeles Open.

The game little belter from Texas blasted out a two-under-par 69 in the second round of the tournament, with a large section of a gallery of 11,500 tagging at his heels for a 36-hole total of 142.

The surprise leader proved to be litle known but widely respected Jerry Barber of Pasadena, who shot a 68 to go with his opening round 69 for a total of 137. The 33-year-old one-time farm boy from Woodson, Ill., a 5-foot-5, 145-pound craftsman on the greens, today played an even 34-34—68 for Riviera's 7019-yard par 35-36—71.

Two strokes back of Barber was another dark horse, Henry Ransom of St. Andrews, Ill. The former Texan, a veteran of more than a decade of tournament golf, fired the lowest round of the tournament to date—a 33-34—67 for 139.

Six Tied at 143

Ransom was the only one standing in the five-stroke spread between Barber and Hogan and Ellsworth Vines. Vines shot a 73 to tie Hogan at 142.

Six players were knotted at 143. They were Sam Snead, Otto Greiner of Baltimore, Bob Gajda of Detroit, Ed Furgol, Eric Monti of Los Angeles and Charles Congdon of Tacoma. Lew Worsham of Washington, D. C., had a 73, which

Tidwell Star, Rebels Win, 22-13

Jacksonville, Fla., Jan. 7 (AP).—Travis Tidwell spun a football web of passes that carried his Rebel All-Stars to a 22-13 victory over the Yankees in the Senior Bowl game today.

Charlie Justice of North Carolina and Doak Walker of Southern Methodist lived up to their press notices, but Tidwell was even better.

The little Auburn quarterback, who was named most valuable in the Southeastern Conference, got the same honor in this classy field of All-America and All-Conference players from every section of the Nation.

Tidwell tossed 19 times to connect on 13 for an amazing gain of 243 yards. End Art Weiner of North Carolina teamed with Tidwell to make a great combination. He fielded eight of those throws for 139 yards.

Campbell Good, Too

The losing Yankees also had a great passing team in Paul Campbell, Texas quarterback, and Jim Owens, Oklahoma end. Campbell threw 27 times, hit on 18 for 147 yards.

Only 20,000 fans turned out to see the all-stars star. But they got a real show out of the 50

Maryland Snaps Loss Streak

Koffenberger's 16 Points Spark Rally

By Jack Walsh
Post Reporter

Dick Koffenberger, 19-year-old soph, staged a brilliant second-half performance to lead Maryland to a stunning 71-65 victory over favored Georgetown in the second game of the double-header at the Armory last night before 2807.

Koffenberger, who played a terrific all-around game, dumped in 16 points that spelled the difference.

Scorned Maryland, with only one victory in 10 starts, snapped a seven-game losing streak with its courageous battle.

At one point it trailed by 12 points, but it took the lead three minues after the second half started and refused to relinquish it.

In the last two minutes Georgetown was within a point, 66-65, when the Terps broke Charley Mack loose for the clinching basket.

Oddly, Mack also dropped three fouls to account for the last five Maryland points. Maryland went into the game lightly regarded with only a victory over Washington and Lee. Georgetown had a five-game winning streak before LaSalle trounced it last time out.

The Terps, however, played a smooth brand of basketball that made the crowd wonder why its record is so one-sided. And no one played a better game than Koffenberger.

Koffenberger, of Baltimore, brother of Duke's famed Ed, had only a field goal and foul in the first 20 minutes. He came out to run the legs off Dick Falvey, Georgetown captain. When he wasn't scoring he was retrieving the ball off the boards, breaking up Georgetown plays, and passing flawlessly to his mates.

Bob Murray and Lee Brawley each contributed 15 points to the Terps' cause. Falvey was high for Georgetown, also with 15.

In the first half, Falvey and Frank Alagia matched each other in a sterling set shot exhibition that carried Georgetown to a 31-19 lead.

Falvey dropped five baskets and Alagia four. Hardworking Frank added two fouls.

Just when it looked like the Hoyas were going to make a runaway of it, Maryland's Bob Murray went to work.

Murray, showing his appreciation for being elected game captain, went on an 8-point binge to bring Maryland within 3 points, 31-28.

The 6-foot-3 ace from Central High used a devastating hook shot to spark the Terps.

Sophomores Tony Durmowicz Mike Vitale came through with baskets and Don O'Leary added a foul to give Georgetown a 35-30 half time lead.

At the hectic finish student timekeepers erronneously called ou that two minutes remained instead of actually three. It might have hurt Maryland but the hard fighting Terps wouldn't be denied their victory.

In the opening game, the Georgetown Frosh won their fourth straight game, defeating the Maryland Frosh, 62-32.

GW Has It Easy With Spiders, 66-49

The Colonials, breaking loose in the second half, coasted to a 66-49 victory in the first game of the college double-header

In the series, which began in 1925, Richmond never has been able to win. For a half the Spiders managed to stay within striking distance, but after intermission, Ray Adler led a flurry that soon gave G. W. a 41-28 lead.

Bud Goglin, scoreless the first half, sank six field goals in the second. That performance gave him runner-up honors to Johnny Moffatt who tallied 14 points.

The victory was the fourth in five Southern Conference tests for G. W. Richmond has won only one of six.

'Never Gave Me Any Reasons'

Sauer Still Baffled by Navy's Tactics

George Described as 'Able Coach Who Didn't Quite Fit In'

NAVY'S football coaching shakeup startled a lot of people—you can head the list with George Sauer.

Sauer, principal figure in the ouster, just shook his head yesterday, "Truthfully, I can't say even now that I know what it's all about. They really never gave me any reasons.

"I do feel that we went all out for Navy. My assistants, Vic Bradford and Bob Ingalls, couldn't have been more loyal and couldn't have worked harder.

"I don't know what more could have been expected. It's a great disappointment to the three of us. I know that we did a good coaching job. That's what makes it so confusing."

Meantime, a Navy source tried to shed some light. Asking not to be identified, he said, "It's a funny thing and it's hard to put your finger on. We respect George Sauer as a high-type fellow and we think he's an able football coach.

"Somehow, though, he didn't quite fit in.

"We weren't satisfied with the way things were going and felt a change was necessary. Maybe we're wrong, maybe we're making a big mistake, but we felt we just couldn't stand pat."

Sauer later said: "I don't know what that means about not fitting in—maybe some people feel that we didn't attend enough cocktail parties.

"We had a coaching job to do and we tried to do it."

Fresh from Kansas, where they won two Big Six co-championships and a spot in the 1948 Orange Bowl, Sauer and his aides came to Navy to face the toughest schedule in the country. It was roundly agreed that the Middie material wasn't close to being adequate to it.

Navy lost to Notre Dame, Michigan, Missouri, Penn, Duke, California and Columbia that year. Nobody was the least bit surprised.

But everyone was properly worshipful when Navy did the seemingly impossible in the memorable 21-21 tie with Army's unbeaten juggernaut.

The Sauer-planned offense enabled Navy to retain possession of the ball for nearly 75 percent of the game. The admirals thought he was a great coach that day.

Last season, Navy was bucking its head against the same wall. At the outset, few thought Navy would win as many as three of its nine games. But the Middies came through against good Princeton and Duke teams, beat Columbia's sophs and tied highly touted Tulane.

It wasn't a bad year until the Army game.

Sauer is the first to agree. "We didn't play even a little bit of football. Why, I cant say. It's one of those unexplainable things. I think I know why Army was so good. The Cadets remembered the 1948 Navy game and Penn properly scared them in a 14-13 scrap just before we met them. We were just awful."

With sophs in key positions, Navy had a promising team last season.

The Middie figure to improve next season. Three men who have had more than a little to do with the improvement won't be around.—JACK WALSH.

Justice opened the way to two Rebel touchdowns. He went 26 to begin the first drive and the 29 to start the last.

Another Tidwell-to-Rich toss covered most of 33 yards in the final touchdown march. Price scored it with a 1-foot smackover.

Chamberlain Defeats Bell In 3d Game

By West McLean
Post Reporter

Defending champion Central had a tough time nosing out Roosevelt, 38-35, and Western scored a mild upset by defeating Anacostia, 56-44, in Interhigh games before 1200 yesterday afternoon at Uline Arena.

In the third game of the triple-header, Chamberlain's Volts defeated Bell Vocational, 38-31, staving off a late rally by the losers.

Tony Magnatto led the Volts with 12 points. Gene Melito had 11 for Bell.

Central, behind 16-14, held a 26-25 margin in the last minutes of the third quarter. Bill Smith put in a layup and following with a four shot put the Vikings ahead, 29-25. Central never lost the lead after that.

The lead changed hands nine times and the score was tied six times in a game in which no more than four points ever separated the two teams.

Terry Gregory turned in a professional job of freezing the ball for Central in the last minute and 45 seconds of the game. Single-handedly he controlled the ball and kept it away from the desperate Rough Riders.

Sid Frank, with 10 points for Central, was the game's high scorer. Ed Graham had nine points for Roosevelt.

In the second game, Western came back after being behind, 25-21, at halftime. Harold Weintraub, with a set shot, and Louie Snauffer, with two free throws, quickly tied matters up at the start of the third period.

Buddy English put the Indians back in front, 27-25, with a set shot. Marvin Rosenblatt put the Red Raiders in the lead minutes later to stay with two free throws and a layup, making it 35-33 Western at the end of the third period.

Rosenblatt and Weintraub added a set shot and a free throw respectively to increase the edge to 38-33.

Hogan Has 69, Ties for 3d Place With 142 added to yesterday's 72 gave him 145.

Tonight the field was trimmed slightly. Players with scores of 158 and under go into tomorrow's round. Tomorrow night it will be cut to 64 and ties.

Snead, who had a 71 yesterday, looked like a threat for awhile. He was two under par at one stage. But his putter turned to rubber and he missed two three-foot putts and a four-footer on the back nine late this afternoon and wound up with 72 for 143.

The first round leader, Furgol of Royal Oak, Mich., also faltered after his 68 yesterday. Furgol required 75 strokes today for his 143.

A stiff fight looms ahead in the 18-hole round tomorrow and Monday, but Hogan is still the focal point of interest.

Hogan Settles Down

Gone today was the drama and tenseness of his return to competition yesterday for the first time since he was badly injured in a car crash 11 months ago.

Replacing the Hogan of yesterday with his jittery 73 was a careful, much more confident player. Nothing seemed to obther him—even an amateur photographer who trained his camera directly in the line of a Hogan putt.

And where he seemed to lose power as play progressed yesterday, he closed strongly today.

Hogan, clipping a stroke off par with a spectacular 50-foot slanting putt on the fifteenth hole and another with an eight-foot putt on the seventeenth, improved on his 73 fired yesterday.

Hogan climbed into contention with a 34, 35—69 exhibition. He had two birdies on the first side and two coming home. His 60-foot putt was registered on a sharply slanting green and a putt that had to arch up and then drop down. He found the cup.

Honors Gridmen

The Alumni Circle T Club, an organization of former athletes of McKinley Tech High School, will meet tomorrow night at 8 o'clock at the Touchdown Club.

The 1949 football team and its coach, Ed Solomon, will be the guests of honor.

Somebody Must Lose

Fesler Talks Game's Future—Not His

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Jan. 7 (AP).—Wesley Fesler still has the folk guessing about when, and if, he's going to quit as Ohio State's grid coach.

The resignation reports have been flying high for almost three weeks, but Fesler says he is no closer to making a decision than he was when the first rumor reared its head.

He told Paul Hornung of the Columbus Dispatch today:

"My situation hasn't changed one bit. I honestly don't know what will happen. I do know I definitely haven't written a letter of resignation. I haven't even given any thought to how I would word such a letter, when and if."

In recent interviews, one with Si Burick, sports editor of the Dayton Daily News, Fesler has taken fandom to task and has pointed out some of the evils of big-time football, along with emphasizing his own ideas about the game.

"I love football," he told Burick. "I'm crazy about working with boys but I'm afraid intercollegiate football is going by the boards unless the fans cease their efforts to humiliate a coach and his boys when they lose one, even if they look good and try hard. Think of the difference it makes between losing a game by 7-6 and winning by the same score. Why?

"I hear of high school coaches now who are selling their boys down the river—yes, selling them—taking fees from certain colleges because they recommend their stars to those schools. Is that disgraceful, or isn't it?

"WOULD YOU BELIEVE that Benny Oosterbaan of Michigan—good old pleasant Benny, a friend of mine for years—has been a sick man since he became head coach? And that he, as a coach who took Michigan to a conference title share with us in 1949, had to suffer great abuse since the season's end because his Wolverines happened to lose to Army and Northwestern and tie us?

"Don't misunderstand me. I still say there's only one way to play—and that is to play to win. When I get so gosh-darned blase that I don't think winning is good, then Im talking like a man with a hole in his head.

"I know stadiums have to be filled. I know that we help create our own pressures because we want the best football players to come to our school. All that is good. But I still believe that the most important item in a college football player's life is to get an education; that his athletics should come second.

"By gosh, if that attitude doesn't prevail, then football is a monster that in time will destroy itself. I don't want that to happen because, as I say, I love this game and the boys who play it. I don't want it said that nice guys can't coach.

"But unless the game's partisans realize there are times when games are going to be lost—and defeat must be accepted—I'm afraid the game is doomed."

Navy Swamps VMI, 76-26; 2 Subs High

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 7 (AP).—Navy's Cotton Bowl runnerup returned to its home court today and smashed Virginia Military Institute, 76-26.

The one-sidedness made the debut of television at Navy's basketball games pleasant for the Midshipman but dismal for the Cadets. VMI, left at a standstill by Navy's fast breaks, lost its third straight.

Durham, N. C., Jan. 7 (AP)—Duke's Blue Devils upset the North Carolina State Wolfpack here tonight before 9000 basketball fans, 58 to 55.

The Blue Devils took the lead in the early minutes of the second half and stayed ahead the rest of the way.

Duke became the first Southern Conference team this season to defeat the Wolfpack, conference champions for the past three seasons.

It was the second loss in 11 games for North Carolina State, ranked seventh nationally in this week's Associated Press poll.

Virginia Wildlife Contest Begins

57 Prizes Offered

By Ralph Murdock

THE THIRD ANNUAL Essay contest to stimulate interest in Virginia wildlife among the school children is now under way. Fifty-seven prizes aggregating $1000 are open to the Virginia students in grades from 5 to 12, inclusive.

MURDOCK

The contest closes on February 28, 1950, and essays must be submitted through the schools participating and each essay must contain a minimum of 500 words. An appeal is hereby made to all sportsmen and conservationists in Virginia to help put across the contest. A grand gesture, we would say.

Deer kills west of the Blue Ridge exceeded the kill last year for the same area by 323 animals. Hunters bagged 1723 deer last year. Over 300 hunting licenses were checked by Game Manager Goldie Smith in the George Washington National Forest and not a single infraction of the requirements was found.

An investigation by James W. Engle, jr., graduate student in the Wildlife Research Unit, V. P. I., indicates that an over-population of deer exists in 13 areas of Virginia.

As defined by this study, it is an area in which the deer are inflicting damage on the forest vegetation, or an area where agricultural crops are being damaged to such a point that the deer are interfering with a farmer's livelihood.

The investigation further shows that in most cases deer damage is prevalent on these areas only during certain seasons of the year and particular types of crops are affected. This does not mean that deer numbers are necessarily getting out of hand. Farmers can make remedial measures by obtaining permission from their county game warden.

DR. IRA N. GABRIELSON, president of the Wildlife Management Institute and internationally recognized as one of the world's prominent conservationists, recently was awarded the coveted Audubon Medal "for distinguished service in saving the Nation's natural resources."

The medal, designed by Paul Manship, was created by the National Audubon Society to give recognition to eminent conservationists. The only previous recipient was Dr. H. H. Bennett, chief of the U. S. Soil Conservation Service.

The recent hot spell really did the tricks to some of our local anglers. Vernon Palmer, of McLean, Va., had stored his outboard until spring. He put away his tackle to await the perch run in the Potomac River but he finally gave in and dragged out his fishing parapheralia to take a fling at the yellow perch at Pig Point.

His efforts were not too well rewarded for he only caught six yellow perch and twelve small catfish Vernon claims that the waters of the Patuxent were a trifle too cloudy for good fishing.

Ralph Sunderland, who has a fleet of fishing boats near Pig Point explains that the better catches of perch are made in cold weather in 20 to 30 foot depths.

The best reported catch of rockfish during the week was by Doyle Kendall near the Gooses when 32 stripers were hauled in.

The Sports Reel:

Grimm Gets $90,000 for 3-Year Pact

TULSA, OKLA., Jan. 7. (AP).—Dick Burnett, millionaire oilman owner of the Dallas club of the Texas baseball league, announced today he had hired Charlie Grimm as manager for $90,000 for three years.

The Dallas boss said the $90,000 would be strictly on a cash basis involving no stock or bonus payments.

It was believed by veteran baseball men at the conference that on a yearly basis of $30,000 Grimm had become the highest paid minor league manager in history.

Burnett is here for the annual Texas League meeting. Grimm resigned yesterday as Chicago Cubs vice president to take the job. He is a former Cub manager.

Grimm's $30,000 a year is believed to be about double the salary ever paid a Texas League manager in the past.

Herzl Scores 67 Points But Isn't Even Close

Chicago, Jan. 7. (AP).—The ball was put through the basket at the rate of 5 points per minute as Morton Junior College smothered Herzl Junior College, 146 to 67, in a regulation basketball game today.

Morton's Ken Turek led the attack against Herzl's virtually nil defense with 32 points.

Giants Quickly Sign Dark for 16,000

NEW YORK, Jan. 7. (AP).—Alvin Dark, shortstop recently acquired from the Boston Braves in a gigantic six-man trade, has signed his 1950 contract, the New York Giants said today.

Dark, whose hitting fell off to .276 in 130 games for Boston last season, received a "substantial increase." No sum was named, but about $10,000 was reported as the figure.

Runner in Mufti Fools Boston Cop

Boston, Jan. 7 (AP).—From here in Jesse Van Zandt, noted marathon runner, is going to wear trunks on his practice spins.

A patrolman took after Van Zandt last night when he observed him running in the Back Bay. The marathoner was in street clothes.

Thinking the runner was a holdupman, the patrolman brought him down with a flying tackle. Van Zandt was released with apologies.

"If I'd known he was trying to catch me, he'd never had a chance," the distance hiker said.

Titone Test For Dynamite

Little Dynamite, 19-year-old local featherweight hotshot, will be shooting for his seventeenth straight professional victory when he meets Charlie Titone, Brooklyn featherweight, in Turner's Arena feature 10-round attraction tomorrow night.

Dynamite, with his bobbing and weaving style, earned the right to meet Titone by scoring wins over two local favorites, Leo LeBrun and Jose Cardenas. Dynamite must win tomorow night to meet Jimmy Cooper, Washington featherweight champion, next summer.

Titone met Cooper three times, each wining once and one bout ending in a draw.

Gene Smith, former amateur champion who has scored two one-round knockouts since turning pro, takes on Tim Healy of New York in a five-round preliminary. Other prelims have Pat Thomas meeting Manny Corea in five, Carl Minnis taking on Sam Keley in five and Kid Wolfe opening the show against Scott Richardson in a four-rounder.

Federoff chopped four and one-tenth seconds off the former school record.

Sanity Code Faces Showdown

NCAA Will Be Asked To Expel Seven

By Will Grimsley

New York, Jan. 7 (AP).—Is the "Sanity Code" an answer to the college search for truer amateurism or is it just another good try that failed?

We should find out next week when the National Collegiate Athlectic Association meets here to bare the code's teeth.

Kenneth L. (Tug) Wilson, NCAA secretary, has announced the body will be asked to expel seven member institutions accused of openly defying the new set of recruiting standards.

University of Virginia and Virginia Tech, two of those known to be on the prospective "black list," have warned they plan to fight to the finish—carrying the battle to floor of the convention and counting heads, if necessary.

The code was set up for the announced purpose of removing some of the professional taint from college athletics, particularly football.

It puts a sharp restriction on subsidization. Mainly the code stipulates a college cannot offer financial inducements to prospective athletes and cannot grant them aid which is not available to other students under the same conditions.

In adopting the code, the NCAA set itself up in business as a regulatory body for the first time, a sort of national athletic conference. It formed its own police force.

This police force, known as the constitutional compliance committee, has been pounding the beat looking for violators.

The past summer it announced nine schools had been found openly defying the new rules. Twelve others were caught with the goods but promised they'd be good, the committee said.

Finally, Secretary Wilson announced seven, instead of nine, would be offered to the convention for expulsion.

Virginia, Virginia Tech, The Citadel and Virginia Military Insttute were reported to be on the list. Virginia and Virginia Tech said it was so and announced their plans to fight against the code, which they said encouraged "hypocrisy."

If banished, they will be unable to schedule athletic contests with NCAA member schools. Institutions that meet "black listed" teams will face expulsion themselves.

Colgate W. Darden, president of the University of Virginia, has asked permission to present the school's position from the floor of the convention.

If the convention votes on the proposed expulsion, Darden indicated he would demand a member-by-mail poll.

"How can anyone vote against us when they are as guilty and probably more so than we are," a Virginia spokesman said.

Virginia's position is that practically everybody is paying athletes in violation of the code, so bring it out in the open.

The code must be liberalized to be workable, Virginia says. The university wants to pay an athlete enough money to attend school so he can devote his full time to study and athletics, without having to work.

Louis Reported Denying He Considers Bout With Ez

Los Angeles, Jan. 7 (AP).—The question of whether Joe Louis wants a comeback crack at the heavyweight boxing title is a matter of dispute tonight.

Fred Sommers, who is helping book some of Louis' current exhibitions and has been handling publicity for Louis, quoted the retired champion today as saying he may consider boxing Ezzard Charles for the title after he returns this spring from an exhibition tour in South America.

Later in the day a sports writer for the Los Angeles Times quoted Louis as saying, "There's nothing to it. Sommers has no business speaking for me. He has no connection with me except to help book some of my exhibitions. I don't have any plans beyond this tour."

Louis could not be reached immediately. At his hotel, Sommers said, "I have three witnesses who heard Joe tell me what I said he said."

Mulloy, Grant Gain Dixie Tennis Finals

Tampa, Fla., Jan. 7 (AP).—It's Gardnar Mulloy, the Miami tennis slicker, and Byron M. (Bitsy) Grant of Atlanta, who still has lots of good tennis left in him, in the finals of the Dixie Tennis Tournament.

Top-seeded Mulloy, playing almost perfect tennis, ran over fifth-seeded Tony Trabert of Cincinnati, 6-1, 6-0, 6-2.

Dr. Arnold Beisser, the New Orleans interne, fell before Grant 6—3, 9—7, 6—3. Beisser, who was unseeded in the tournament, plays a hard, smashing game and that's the kind Grant likes to play against.

The 39-year-old Grant chopped his way to a win, catching Beisser off balance lots of times.

Laura Lou Jahn of Clearwater, defeated Doris Hensen of Rollins College, 6—4, 2—6, 6—2 to gain the women's singles finals.

Miss Jahn will face Marta Barnett of Miami, who had an easy time with Heather Nicholls of Rollins College, 6—1, 6—0.

Virginia's Tebell To Be Proposed As League Head

Richmond, Va., Jan. 7 (AP).—Gus Tebell, baseball and basketball coach at the University of Virginia, will be proposed for the post of Southern Conference commissioner at a meeting of league delegates in New York on Thursday, the Times-Dispatch said tonight.

The Richmond paper said an athletic director of a Virginia college belonging to the conference told them he would recommend Tebell for the post.

Appointment of a commissioner was authorized by the conference at its recent meeting in Roanoke, Va. At Charlottesville, Tebell said tonight he would be "available" if the job were offered him.

Loriot Equals Record

Choice Runs Six Furlongs In 1.09.2

Miami, Fla., Jan. 7 (AP).—In a sensational speed performance, Windsor Farm's Loriot equaled Tropical Park's 6 furlong record in winning the featured $5000 Ponce de Leon Handicap today.

Carrying 117 pounds, the bay mare reeled off the dash in 1:09 2/5, tying the track record established by Hornbeam in 1947. This was her second straight victory at the meeting.

Ridden by Herb Lindberg, Loriot was straight as a string to beat Mrs. A. Roberts' stretch-running Eatontown by a length, while Jaclyn Stable's speedball Spotted Bull was a weary third, after having blazed the way for half a mile.

Fourth was Tight Squeeze, with Bolo Mack and Risk A Whirl completing the select field of sprinters. A late withdrawal was Miami-owned Buzfuz.

Loriot, one of the fastest sprinters in the country, was the favorite at $5.60 straight and her share of the purse was $3250.

Spotted Bull continued to hold on well, but could not resist the challenge of the mare, and even succumbed in the last few strides to Eatontown's belated rush.

Bill Bennings . . .

Just because an apprentice jockey fails to become a sensation at the start of his career is no reason he won't reach the top as a rider. Clarence Picou, the 1948 apprentice sensation, found the going a bit rough after he lost his allowances. He's a fine rider, but he virtually had to start over once he had to ride at equal weights with the veterans. On the other hand, many boys have been slow to get going as novices. An example is Johnny Longden, who has ridden more than 3000 winners, a mark that will stand for years to come. Johnny, born in England and raised in Canada, rode his first winner in 1927 which proved his only winner of that year. The following season he had numerous mounts but got home in front only 11 times. He really did not reach his peak until the early 1930's and it was not until 1938 that he led the Nation's riders for the first time, turning the trick twice since in 1947 and 1948. During hies long career, Longden has seen hundreds of "yearly sensations" drop into obscurity.—BILL.

Move to End Liquor Price Suit Rejected

The Federal Trade Commission has rejected two motions to dismiss charges of attempting to fix minimum retail liquor prices here lodged against Middle Atlantic Distributors, Inc., it was announced yesterday.

The commission said evidence showed that Middle Atlantic, exclusive distributors of the Hiram Walker brands of liquor, "instituted and pursued an aggressive policy of requiring retail dealers to sell at prices" established by the corporation.

In refusing to dismiss the complaint, the FTC ran counter to a recommendation made last September by FTC Trial Examiner William L. Pack.

At that time Pack recommended the charges be dismissed on the grounds that "a seller has the right to select his own customers" and "may legally establish the prices at which he wishes his goods resold" provided he does not enter into price fixing agreements with dealers.

But yesterday the FTC held that "there is substantial testimony to indicate that one or two dealers affirmatively promised or agreed with respondents (Middle Atlantic) to adhere to the schedule of prices announced by them."

The opinion continued: "Under the circumstances disclosed by the evidence . . . when dealers raised their prices to conform with those required by respondents, the conclusion is inescapable that they did so as the result of an implied agreement that they would adhere to the prices fixed . . . in order that they might continue to purchase the Hiram Walker Brands . . ."

Action against Middle Atlantic was originated by Maurice Milstone, owner of Milstone's Acme Liquor Store, 927 Pennsylvania ave. nw., last February.

Milstone complained that when he refused to abide by allegedly fixed prices, Middle Atlantic refused to do business with him.

The FTC opinion noted that Middle Atlantic has not yet presented its case. Final decision on the issue will be made following hearing of the case on its merits before the board.

Siberia A-Blast Right on Time, Forecaster Says

London, Jan. 7 (AP).—Kenneth De Courcy, a magazine editor, said late tonight an atomic explosion occurred in Soviet Siberia at midnight (Siberian time), just as he had predicted last Thursday.

He said the explosion was verified by "an advanced method of detection of which the Russians are believed to have no knowledge."

De Courcy predicted last January that the Russians would attempt an atomic explosion in 1949. President Truman announced in September there had been such an explosion last summer.

The 40-year-old editor said tonight he had received a message confirming the new explosion "from an area outside the Soviet Union." He said he had no other details immediately and declined to amplify his reference to the area from which the information was relayed.

START OVER AGAIN
When a man is out of work or when he is unhappy about his work, he needs counsel, encouragement and a brand new opportunity. A MESSAGE TO YOU: You went to school 10 or 12 years, perhaps to college, to learn a little reading, writing and arithmetic in order to get exactly where you are right now and you must be nearing the end of your rope or you wouldn't be reading this part of the newspaper, would you? THINK! All right, how would you like to go back to school and get another chance at some of the opportunities that now pass by your door? How would you like to go to school 3 hours each evening for one week, and then find yourself ready to step into a brand new opportunity where you can earn from $500 to $1,000 per month? ABSOLUTELY FREE, no cost now or ever. We will provide the school privilege to men of good reputation who are between 21 and 60 years of age. Read this out loud to your wife or mother. Write a short letter and mention the kind of work you are most capable of doing. Your letter will be held in strict confidence if you are now employed. Give your full name, and complete address and telephone number.

Who Says a Girl Needs Brass?

So what if she isn't ever 'dragged' to Annapolis; GIs can dance, and the bus ride is on the house

There's something about a soldier, even in tweeds

By Sonia Stein

THE ADMIRALS' dancing daughters may find their happiest hunting at Annapolis and the generals' dimpled darlings may think West Point hops are tops.

But a girl needn't be born with a brass spoon in her mouth to dance with a military man in and around Washington.

All she has to do is call Columbia 0735.

It's a very busy number. Thousands of young women—college students, Government girls, high school girls (over 18, please) and department store clerks—have called it since pre-Pearl Harbor days to cut themselves in on a never-ending round of dances which lead in most cases to fun, and—yes, in some cases even to marriage.

WHEN a girl calls Columbia 0735 she doesn't get a guarantee of fun and surely not of marriage, but she does get a seat reservation—for free—on a special bus which takes her from the District Building in downtown Washington to a young and active stag line at Fort Myer, Fort McNair, the Andrews and Bolling Air Force Bases, the Halls of Montezuma at Quantico, Va. The buses, provided by the military bases, are waved gaily past the guards to the recreation halls.

Once there, what happens? After a first icy, wish-I'd-stayed-at-home feeling, and a few delaying tactics in the dressing room, the girls emerge to look at the "cute new boy with blond, curly hair," or the reassuring sight of half a dozen familiar faces.

The wise girls separate. It's a rare man—in uniform or out—who will tackle a cluster of chatting girls and choose one rose from the bouquet. A girl sitting by herself is not so formidable to approach, it seems.

ONCE on a uniformed arm—or a mufti arm for that matter, since civilian dress is permitted—conversation starts and that's all there is to it!

How quickly and completely a girl captures the stag line is up to her.

Sometimes it's a chore.

"Gee, I don't know what some of these boys come for," sighed one aggrieved young lady at Fort Myer last weekend. "They just stand and watch. They don't even talk!" She was thinking perhaps that her pretty new dress, curly coiffure and dash of eau de cologne had earned her at least one turn around the floor before curfew.

But then she could look back to the nights she had more partners than she could cope with, and can look forward to similar nights. The different bases, the different boys, the different relationships to payday, have quite a bit to do with how much fun a girl has on any particular night.

SHE MAY be selective about where she goes (or she may dance every night in the week if she has the stamina) and deliberately choose the twice-a-month Saturday night trips to Quantico where a girl "over 21" may meet the seasoned Marines. Or if she's a schoolgirl barely old enough to qualify, she may prefer Fort Myer, where the clear, young eyes of the new recruits keep alert for teen-agers.

In this matter she has some assistance if she's new. When she calls the magic number—any time of the day and almost any time of the night—she gets the cheery voice of Mrs. Anna Lansburgh who has been fairy godmother to this "operation romance," since before Pearl Harbor. Never one to pry, Mrs. Lansburgh doesn't ask a girl's age. "What age boy are you interested in?" she'll inquire discreetly.

Advice on what to wear is also available. Even advice on how to behave, if it's asked.

The parties are as carefully chaperoned as a debutante's ball, with a woman recreation officer provided by the recreation organization at each military base, which also provides the music, the hall, the refreshments and the transportation.

GIRLS WHO attend the dances under the auspices of Mrs. Lansburgh, who is a volunteer acting in cooperation with the regular military recreation workers, must return on the bus and are checked in by a hostess who travels with them. The girl who "missed the bus because she went back for her gloves" doesn't do it twice. Girls who don't conform to the rules usually find that "the space is all filled" the next time they apply for reservations.

But of course, when you're dancing with a soldier and he asks you for your home telephone number so he can call you when he gets to town . . . that, of course, is how the marriages come about. Mrs. Lansburgh estimates (perhaps optimistically) that almost half the girls marry servicemen.

She takes special delight in the lonely girl who once called to say that her "life was at an end" but who went to a dance instead, where she met and married a sergeant. The couple expect a baby in June.

And how about the widowed mother who worried about her daughter going to these dances, then went to one of them at Mrs. Lansburgh's suggestion and met a retired major to whom she is now happily wed?

Women's Era

Female Role To Expand in This Century

By Hal Boyle

NEW YORK, Jan. 7 (AP).—The most interesting thing about the next 50 years will be — women.

They have been the most interesting things in any half century.

But the big problem won't be so much how women will get along. It will be how diminishing man can get along with them.

There is no doubt that this is really a woman's century, and by the year 2000 the female brand will be stamped more clearly than ever upon it.

The chief task in the 50 years ahead from the standpoint of women is merely to extend their conquest of the male ego. The groundwork for this was successfully laid from 1900 to 1950.

Politics Too Rough

Will women, as a class, make a particularly great to-do in the field of politics? As a lady politico expressed it to me:

"Politics isn't worth the slamming around you have to take."

Science is pre-eminently a woman's arena because it is neat and tidy, and the one who comes up with the best recipe wins. It beats cooking all hollow, and we are in for a great rash of petticoat scientists.

Since maids are almost impossible to hire and will become more so, the only solution will be in the further harnessing of husbands. They have taken the place of servants in many cases.

Who's Who in the Fashion Industry:

'Designing Women' Dominate Top Bracket U. S. Style

By Peggy Preston

ON THE eve of our semi-annual jaunt to Manhattan in quest of grist for the mill of our fashion columns, we're suddenly brought up short with a bit of a thought:

Who are these characters who lurk behind the labels on the clothes we'll be looking at and reporting on during the fourteenth National Press Week of the New York Dress Institute which opens tomorrow?

These "name" designers, the Caesars of the fashion world—what are they, themselves, really like? Are they Machiavellian creatures who linger in dark realms, scheming of new hemlines and tricky necklines with which to taunt the feminine population each season? Or are they common folk, like you and me, with jobs to do as best they can? Jobs which, in their case, inevitably find expression in the width of a skirt, the slant of a hat, the cut of a coat.

AND, AGAIN, how do these men and women differ from their counterparts in Paris, London and other fashion centers of the world?

Collectively speaking, the designers of American fashions are a hard-driving, highly imaginative lot. They've a sharp nose for news, security prices, and a quick, piercing insight into the buying habits of their public. They vie violently for the honor of creating a "trend," drop it instantly if it does not catch on.

Individually, they are distinct personalities. Their ideas, philosophies and habits are often translated into style items of the fashions they create. For instance, Laddie Northridge, hat designer, became interested in farming a few years ago and has since doted on feathers for his chapeaux. Last year another hat stylist, Sally Victor, went mad over Canasta. Promptly she fashioned a bright felt bonnet, sprinkled it with a deck of miniature Canasta cards.

THE AMERICAN couture group differs sharply from those in Paris and London. Its members, usually creating for mass production, rather than individual customers, face different problems than do the heads of European custom houses.

It is a group too, that unlike those abroad, is dominated by women. The dressmaker tradition in the United States has given first place to the feminine sex, generally leaving the details of manufacture and production in the hands of the men.

Hence, American women salute such names as Hattie Carnegie, Nettie Rosenstein, Pauline Trigere, Adele Simpson, Claire McCardell, Jane Derby, Fira Benenson, Ceil Chapman, Mollie Parnis, Tina Leser and many more.

BUT MORE and more men are stealing into the act. Norman Norell of Traina-Norell is considered by many as America's top designer today. Christian Dior, fresh from conquests in Paris, has set up shop in New York. On the West Coast there is the dynamic Adrian, in Manhattan Charles James, Brigance, Maurice Rentner and others.

Most of the women whose designs you will be reading about in these columns this week, love pretty clothes themselves. They also have hobbies, tastes and characteristics that set each one apart.

HATTIE CARNEGIE (wife of Maj. John Zanft) is a tiny, electrifying woman who enjoys wearing her own "little" suits. Years ago she vowed never to wear a shoulder pad—and she never has, despite the vogue. She has a large personal wardrobe, but orders only about two costumes a season and keeps them forever.

Her main aversion: Women who buy nice clothes and don't take care of them.

LILLY DACHE, famed hat designer who lately turned her talents to suits and dresses, frankly adores clothes, has loads of them.

With her husband, Jean Despres, she lives in a fabulous penthouse atop the Dache building in New York, and in fine weather works there each morning on the high-walled terrace. There, surrounded by a bamboo fence which is covered with flowers, she sips her coffee.

ADELE SIMPSON, whose sure-fire fashions delight bright, young women, is tiny, quiet, wears her own clothes to perfection. Outside her office, her main concern is her family, consisting of fabric designer Wesley Simpson, and two children, Jeffery and Joan.

Her hobby: Landscape painting.

PAULINE TRIGERE is a volatile, handsome woman who has risen to the top ranks of American fashion within a comparatively short time.

Daughter of a Parisian tailor, she was trained in the French tradition. In New York, with her brother Robert, she turns out a beautiful collection each season.

(Editor's Note: Monday morning fashion editors from this country and Canada will converge on New York for a first-hand look at 1950's fashion picture, as presented by the Couture Group of that city. Our staff member, Peggy Preston, will be on hand for the week-long series of style shows, and will report her observations in these columns daily, beginning Tuesday, January 10, and concluding Sunday, January 15.)

Spring Styles Will Recall Flapper Era

By Dorothy Roe

New York, Jan. 7 (AP).—Meet the flapper of 1950.

She's been on the way for some time, but this spring's fashions will put her squarely in the vanguard of the style parade, which she led so confidently back in 1925.

From her short skirts to her shorter hair, she's back, like it or not. New York designers are showing spring styles so reminiscent of the roaring twenties that the Nation's fashion editors, arriving for the semiannual showings of the couture group of the New York Dress Institute, will rub their eyes to be sure they're not seeing a playback of a jazz age movie.

Shape Doesn't Alter

The tight sheath dresses, the wraparound coats, even the peekaboo georgette blouses of the flapper era are back in the spotlight. There is, however, one reassuring difference—though the styles are similar to those of 25 years ago, the shape of the girl who wears them is not. Miss 1950 insists on retaining her natural curves and her slim waistline, and not for all the sables in Russia will she consent to the flat-chested "boyish form" of 1925.

The chemise dress, that straight sheath with the bathing suit neckline so popular in the Charleston era, is a major trend of the season among top designers. It is often shown in georgette or chiffon.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Although Much in Love, Young Parents Are in Dispute as to Which One Should Take Care of Newborn Daughter at Night

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My husband and I are very much in love and have very much in common. However, as is the case with all marriages, we do have some problems.

In particular, our main difference at present has to do with who should get up at night to take care of our very young baby, who naturally requires much attention.

We both love the baby, but I feel that after I have taken care of her during the day, my work should be finished when I go to bed. I think in fairness to the woman that the father ought to do something to help.

My husband works hard in his job and I know that he is conscientious. However, I think that he ought to spend some time with our child, and since he cannot during the day, that he ought to care for her at night. But he does not agree with me to that extent. He agrees to help, but thinks we should take turns on alternate nights. Do you think he loves our child? What have you to say about the situation? A. B.

Wife Is Airing Great Confusion

DEAR A. B.: It seems to me your trouble is that you got married in the spirit of one sailing off into the clouds on a magic carpet, and consequently find the unremitting chores of wifehood, homemaking and especially infant-care about as uncongenial as a camel ride would be, comparatively.

In short, you weren't prepared for the tedium, stresses and disciplines of life in double harness. You hadn't thought ahead realistically, to plan competent management of your new duties or to question whether you could be a worthwhile helpmate. And psychologically you were too immature—still too dependent upon the brains, energy and aims of others to carry you—to keep an inner balance and cope self-confidently with the rising tide of unexpected demands on your resources.

The vehemence of your present attitude stems from unrealized resentment of the work you've cut out for yourself. You suffer from increasing vexation and self-pity, and in particular at this time you resent the baby's need of more or les continuous care—as for instance: bathing, feeding, changing, soothing, airing, special laundry, formula-fixing, etc.,—all of which grinds you down to the status of harried flunkey, so you feel, when your aspiration was and is to be "taken care of" by the man you married.

Makes Extremist Demand on Husband

IMPULSES to have revenge upon some alleged injustice usually accompany "injured" states of feeling; and in this instance it seems you've unconsciously elected your husband to be the goat. You are determined to get him up at night, rob him of rest, give him a "dose" of baby-care, etc., to satisfy vindictive emotions, and your theory that you are making a reasonable request is pure camouflage of hostile ferment.

This I gather from your extremist view that he ought to take full charge of the baby at night. That punitive demand doesn't make sense when levied against the partner who is the family breadwinner; because you may catnap or idle during the day, to compensate for wakeful nights, whereas he must be fresh and diligent on his job or run great risk of losing it.

However, please understand, I'm not saying your husband shouldn't help with the baby, occasionally or even regularly, to give you relief. But I can't find any fault whatsoever in his suggestion of sharing the task, by relieving you of nursing chores every alternate night. Indeed I think this offer is generously fair, coming from a hard-working father; and I feel that in justice to him, you cannot ask and should not accept any more than that. M. H.

Mary Haworth counsels through her column, not by mail or personal interview. Write her in care of The Washington Post.

Europe's Children Still Hungry

TO THE Greek orphan, the waif in Italy or the starved German infant, the outstretched hand of the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund is the only bright sign of tomorrow.

Yet the average European visitor is not likely to get a glimpse of this childhood suffering, Doris Rutledge, welfare officer reporting on the UNICEF mission in Italy, points out. Tourists rarely penetrate to the slums where many families are still living. Sometimes these "slums" are actually remote mountain caves.

"Conditions in many of the child-caring institutions are pitiful in the extreme, especially now that winter is here," Miss Rutledge says in UNICEF's latest survey. "Youngsters have to stay indoors because they lack warm clothing and good shoes. So they sit or stand in the cold, dismal halls, with nothing to occupy them." Here's the situation up-to-date in the major countries UNICEF is serving.

ONE MILLION Italian children are being given a daily supplementary meal with the help of UNICEF. A government survey made among a group in summer clinics bore out the need for these meals.

THIS WINTER Greece is faced with the gigantic problem of repatriating some 700,000 refugees, among whom are 200,000 children. It is a toss-up, however, which will be better off this winter, those who have returned to the land or the 200,000 who are still in the refugee centers in the towns.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA is unable to provide milk in anywhere near the adequate quantity. She especially welcomes UNICEF's assistance in setting up milk conservation plants so that better use can be made of existing supplies.

IN POLAND, the fund provides means of transportation—so that the services of the few pediatricians can be spread through a system of child-care centers which the government is now trying to establish.

. . . Will fight excise taxes on cosmetics, transportation

By Genevieve Reynolds

IN THE past the Nation's feminine lawmakers have split on various Congressional bills—even the bill that would give them "equal rights."

But there'll be no division among the Ladies of the House this session when a vote arises on the removal of excise tax on cosmetics, baby oil and powder, handbags, and coats, plus transportation. All will marshal their strength to fight woman's battle to be beautiful and well groomed, minus stiff excise levies.

In fact, Mrs. Edna Flannery Kelly of Brooklyn, who was sworn in as a member of the House of Representatives at the opening session Tuesday, campaigned against excise taxes. That's one project she's sure to support along with President Truman's Fair Deal program.

The handsome 42-year-old widow, who was elected November 8 to succeed the late Representative Andrew L. Somers, polled more votes than the other two candidates combined. Like her predecessor, she is a Democrat.

No novice in politics, she played a behind-the-scenes wifely role to her late husband who was an experienced politico. Following the death of her husband, City Court Justice Edward L. Kelly in an automobile accident in 1942, she became research director for the Democratic delegation in the New York State Legislature. About the same time she was named Democratic State committeewoman for Kings County.

Goes Light on Make-Up

HER 19-year-old son, William E. Kelly, II, who was named for his paternal grandfather (Brooklyn's postmaster from 1916 to 1929), is a student at Columbia University. Her 15-year-old daughter, Maura Patricia, attends Marymount School.

Tall, slender and figure-perfect, Mrs. Kelly is five feet, nine inches in height. Her long black hair, pulled back severely from her face, ends in a knot at the nape. She has large, deep-set brown eyes. Powder and lipstick are her only makeup. But she's opposed to the tax even on those.

Since arriving, she has been assigned to the House Administration Committee. Golf and skiing are her favorite sports. Walking, she says, probably will be her principal exercise in Washington.

"I mean to do plenty of walking," she declared smilingly.

Representative Mary T. Norton (D., N. J.), dean of the Congresswomen, says that many people have been writing her to support removal of the excise taxes. She believes that women's coats under $300 should not be taxed, nor handbags under $25. And she sees no reason to tax deodorants or cosmetics.

Hindrance to Grooming

MRS. NORTON says that corporations can afford to pay higher taxes. But the middle and low income groups find excise taxes definitely a hindrance to good grooming.

Two bills that Mrs. Norton expects to push for passage through the second session of the Eighty-first Congress are: 1. granting a national charter to the Girl Scouts of America; 2. Legalizing American citizenship of 130 Polish seamen who came to this country to escape Communist-domination at home.

Representative Katharine St. George (R., N. Y.) not only will work for the removal of the excise tax on transportation and women's essentials but for a business-like old age pension. One constitutent who draws $26 monthly as an old age pension told her that he had not been able to buy or eat a piece of meat in three years.

Handsome, erudite Mrs. Chase Going Woodhouse (D., Conn.) will support the excise abolition program, too. Lately turned practical farmer in her home State, she knows the problems of both planters and consumers.

Will Push Housing Legislation

MRS. WOODHOUSE also will push legislation to obtain housing for the middle income groups, plus the Equal Pay for Equal Work Bill, which she introduced.

Affable Mrs. Edith Nourse Rogers, long time friend of the veterans, will support the removal of the excise tax, and spur veterans' housing and national defense.

"I'm going to do my best to see that the United States Navy is not wiped out," she promises.

Back in Indiana Representative Cecil Harden (R.) had daily visits from women protesting the excise tax on cosmetics, baby powder and oil handbags.

Representative Frances Bolton (R., Ohio) is another who favors the removal of the excise tax.

Representative Reva Beck Bosone (D., Utah) was unable to attend the opening second sessions because of illness. An office spokesman reported that Mrs. Bosone is interested in the removal of excise taxes and will return with definite projects on the Indian question in the West.

Start This Year Right With Curve-Control Diet

By Ida Jean Kain

SINCE this is the season when you are inspired anew to buckle down and do something about your figure, get off to the right start.

The way to break a fattening food habit is to form a slimming one. Start with breakfast. Oh, I know you never eat breakfast . . . just a sweet roll and coffee and perhaps a little jam. And then maybe a doughnut and coffee later on. That's only starch and stimulation. You can have better fare for half the calories. If you'll start eating a balanced breakfast, you can stick with your slimming resolution! That's a promise.

Build the three meals a day around the protective foods, and it will be easy to stay with your reducing diet. When the protective foods are included in normal amounts, not reduced amounts, you have abundant energy as you lose weight because health is safeguarded.

New Race of Amazons in The Making?

By Vivian Brown

IN THE YEAR 2000 people will talk about the Gibson girl as if she'd been a pygmy. 6-feet-2 Dianas will hide those family albums revealing their "midget ancestry" and little sister's favorite doll will wear granny's wedding dress.

Since 1900 women have been growing by leaps and bounds. In that year the average woman was about 5 feet tall, wore a size 3 shoe and was as dainty as a Dresden figurine. Today 36 percent of the female population is between 5 ft. 4 in. and 5 ft. 10 in.—and at age 18 the average shoe size is 7.

By the year 2000, experts figure that the ratio should have crept up to a height of between 5 ft. 10 in. and 6 ft. 2 in.—and shoes will look like violin cases.

TODAY'S modest little giantesses do not know their own strength. But any year now they should, and just wait until they do, says beauty expert Ann Delafield, who explains:

"Nature seems bent on producing a new race of Amazons. Within the next 50 years you'll find the emancipated woman engaging actively in such sports as football, baseball and soccer. She'll think nothing of chopping the wood and acting as family car mechanic."

When Johnny Comes Home:

Report Cards Test Parent, Too

IT'S HARD to face the fact that lack of ability, rather than effort, may be the answer when your Johnny comes home from school with a report card that is somewhat less than perfect. But don't make an issue of your disappointment.

That's the advice of Ruth Strang, education professor at Teachers College, Columbia University.

There is an important difference between arousing feelings of insecurity and guilt in your boy or girl, and creating just enough anxiety to stimulate a youngster really to try. If your child knows that you love him and understand his limitations, he will want to keep your affection by working up to his full capacity, according to the article.

Punishment Destructive

SEVERE punishment for bringing home failing marks, even though a boy or girl has been trying hard, is the worst parent response. Punishment that frightens a child, makes him anxious and destroys the loving relationship with his parents is bad. So is deprivation of wholesome recreation, which may impair, rather than improve, his schoolwork.

Praise the good parts of the report and help him analyze the difficulties. Make specific plans to correct them. This may require meeting the teacher.

Show a youngster he's in no danger of losing his parents' love, even though his marks are far below average, if he does as well as he can. Encourage him to think through situations himself—what he likes or dislikes about school, why he got failing marks, how he could have done better.

In order to be helpful to your child, you need to know what his report card really means. This you will have to learn from the school your boy or girl attends, for different schools have different ways of reporting.

Various Systems

MANY use percentages or letter grades to show your youngster's general position in relation to other pupils in his grade. Other schools mark only in terms of ability. A few schools have a dual marking system showing how a child stands in his grade and also how he is doing in relation to his ability.

Some schools have no report cards at all. Still others let the child write his own report. It is seldom, however, that any report card can tell you exactly what—if anything—is wrong. If the report includes an analysis of each subject, you have something specific to work on.

Instead of putting the kind of information you need on a report card, some schools provide conferences between parents and teachers. This is the best plan of all. It enables you to find out if you are being unjust to a child who is doing his best or are letting a bright boy or girl slip into laziness.

The effect of your child's school reports on his personality and future depends largely on you, the article concludes.

How to Block Needlepoint Chair Seat

I have just finished a chairseat in needlepoint. It is my first experience and I find the material is out of shape. Can you tell me who would steam and block it for me? I understand there is a book published on needlepoint. Can you give me the name and author of this book? T. H.

It is really very easy to block your own needlepoint. Here's the way to do it. Sponge the piece very well on the wrong side until the wool and canvas are very wet. Roll it in a bath towel and let stand until the piece is uniformly wet. Now, stretch the piece into shape and tack it face down on a board—a breadboard is fine—with rustproof thumbtacks. Place the tacks close together, no more than ¾ of an inch apart.

Leave the needlepoint on the board until thoroughly dry—maybe several days. It is not really necessary to press it, but you can do it, if you wish, when the piece is thoroughly dry by placing it right side down on a heavily padded board, covering with a heavy wet cloth and pressing with a hot iron. Do not iron until it is entirely dry, press hard or allow the hot iron to touch the needlepoint.

"The Good Housekeeping Needlecraft Encyclopedia" edited by Alice Carroll (published by Rinehart & Co., Inc., New York and Toronto) has a complete chapter on needlepoint which includes needlepoint patterns for all the letters of the alphabet, a working description of needlepoint stitches (16 of them) and illustrations of needlepoint designs showing use of stitches.

In reply to W. B., if she will dip her doilies in milk and let dry they will be stiff as a board and remain so indefinitely. Her doily must be completely dry before dipping in milk.

This suggestion comes to us from Boston. Thank you, B. B.!

On my daughter's bed, where her head touches the headboard, there's a whitish mark, from perspiration, I suppose. Could you tell me how to remove this? The bed is a dark maple.

C. L. D.

Rub the marked area with powdered pumice and oil. Rub only with the grain. When all the white finish has been removed, wipe away loose pumice with a soft cloth dampened with oil. Now, to the entire surface, apply a coat of maple colored furniture wax which is made by an automobile wax company and can be purchased at some auto supply stores.

For quite some time we have been trying to buy a fireplace shield. I do not mean a screen that is placed in front of the fireplace to prevent sparks from flying out. We want a shield with which to cover the fireplace when it is not being used. I think they were used many years ago and perhaps there are still some available. H. J.

Since fireplace shields are no longer made in large numbers, your only chance of getting one is to find an old one at an antique shop, or to have one made. A long established fireplace equipment firm on 12th st. has several old shields. Possibly one of them may fit your fireplace. If it doesn't, this same firm can make one to order for you of brass or copper. I suggest you call them at District 5363 and discuss it further.

I padded a walnut finish table with towels to iron something quickly—however, the table finish has a big white heat spot. Is there any way to remove this white spot and restore the finish underneath? E. F. D.

If the white mark is not too deep, you may be able to remove it by wiping with camphorated oil. Or, wiping with scratch-removing polish will sometimes remove such spots.

If neither treatment does the trick, try rubbing it with powdered pumice and oil. Rub with the grain and when the blemish is gone, wipe away the pumice with a cloth moistended with oil only. Finish treatment by polishing with a good furniture polish.

Could you please tell me if there are any shops in or around Washington that carry Peter Hunt's decorated wood articles or have the motifs to sell?

R. M. W.

Peter Hunt motifs are done freehand so it isn't really possible to buy patterns. However, it is possible to get a booklet showing Peter Hunt designs at a paint store on New York ave. Also, the same store has an instructor who will show you how to go about this sort of painting. The instruction is given by appointment, so I suggest you call the store at National 1703.

The same store sells decals in antique designs which resemble Peter Hunt painting if you do not wish to attempt the freehand work.

Would you be so kind as to advise me how I would go about getting perspiration odors from the arms of wool, crepe or silk dresses? E. R. C.

Dampen the under-arm area from the wrong side with clear water and rub deodorant powder into it. Let stand until dry and brush off. Repeat if necessary.

PETUNIA!

In frying my eggs,
The most difficult matter
Isn't the cooking,
It's dodging the spatter.

But if you'd sift a small amount of flour into your skiliet, Petunia, the grease wouldn't pop and sputter. Try it!

The Family Scrapbook

By Dr. Ernest G. Osborne

Mary Ann before the full-length mirror preens mother's newest hat atop her head and mother's highest-heeled shoes on her feet. Ray holds papa's pipe between his "milk" teeth and looks over the top of his lensless glasses with a serious air. Stephen delightedly "shaves" himself with a bladeless safety razor.

Little children like the idea of being grown up. In all sorts of ways they show their desire to be like fathers and mothers.

Sometimes we grownups aren't very patient with such play. We don't like our hats or pipes, our shoes or razors being played with. Yet, through such play, many children get a feeling of importance and significance that being little doesn't bring. The idea that childhood is the happy period of life is open to many questions. So often children have to be, or at least are, "squelched." Dramatic play like that described brings at least temporary relief from the feeling of being pushed around by grownups. It shouldn't be discouraged.

Tobé Says...

Have You Made a Square Dance Skirt?

Even the beginning sewer need not be afraid to tackle the making of a square dance cotton skirt. In fact, it's probably the best and easiest way to start your sewing career.

For the cotton fabric makers have done everything but sew up the skirt for you. Most of the fabrics have big bold designs printed in border or panel effects so that all you need do is sew a very few simple seams.

The newest and smartest cotton skirts are the Mexican circular tie-arounds—a fashion that comes from south of the border. These are nothing but enormous slit circles with a hole in the center and a belt to tie around your waist.

Uruguay Diplomat, Wife Plan Visit Home

This is the 10th in a series on embassy homes and hostesses.

By Elizabeth Maguire

THE SMALLEST republic in South America is represented by two of the most beautiful women in Washington. Senora de Dominguez-Campora, wife of the Ambassador of Uruguay, and Senora de Mora, wife of the Minister of Uruguay, are as good-looking as they come—anywhere.

Well under 40, Ines Dominguez-Campora has a pretty face, petite feet and trim figure. Her brown hair is worn in a soft wave, her nails are bright red, and her ears are pierced with circles of gold.

Outside her household, the Ambassador's wife devotes her time mostly to charitable organizations connected with the church. She is descended from one of Uruguay's first families, and it was in Washington that she met her husband.

SENORA DE DOMINGUEZ-CAMPORA, THE AMBASSADOR AND RAQUEL
"Good-by, papa!" He's off to the chancery for a day's diplomacy

Romance Buds In Washington

Some 20 years ago, her father came to this city on a diplomatic mission, bringing along his family and a young secretary named Alberto Dominguez Campora. Romance bloomed between Alberto and Ines and their wedding took place on their return to Montevideo.

Now they have a charming daughter, Raquel, age 16, and a young son, Alberto, age 11, who is smart as a whip. Like many Urguayans, Senora de Campora is a mixture of Spanish, English and German blood. Spanish features predominate in her appearance and her daughter's, but her son is blonde haired and blue-eyed.

When they return to Uruguay next week for a two-month visit, the Ambassador and Senora de Dominguez-Campora will leave their daughter and son in schools at home, and they will return to their apartment at the Wardman Park early in March. The day before they sail from New York next week, the Ambassador and his wife will see "South Pacific."

Both Skilled Horsewomen

In the absence of the Ambassador, the Minister, Jose A. Mora, will be Charge d'Affaires. He and Senora de Mora have been here several years and have settled down like old Washingtonians in a home of their own on Woodland drive.

Both Senora de Mora and Senora de Dominguez-Campora are excellent horsewomen. In their country of rolling grasslands, everyone rides a great deal. Just now Uruguay is an ideal place for swimming. A heat wave is on, and beaches like the Punta del Este are jammed with bathers.

Very different from daily life in the States is the Uruguayan's schedule during the summer. Breakfast is at 10:30 or 11:00, luncheon is at 4:00, tea at 7:30, and dinner at 11. Midnight is considered early evening.

Typical Menu For Dinner at Home

A dinner party in Uruguay might include clear soup with rice, pejerrey or brotola for fish, then a wonderful barbecue steak, salad and sweets. The kitchens are French or Italian, and Uruguay being a cattle raising country, the meat course is always very good.

Service Set

Little Fanfare in Navy Boost

WITH HALF a dozen promotions behind them, families of most of the 23 admirals-elect recently chosen by President Truman, are accepting their boost in gold braid with little fanfare.

After all, the wives insisted, the Senate has not yet okayed the mass promotions of the Navy's favorite captains. And it may be months before all the men may sport their new stars and stripes and begin their new assignments.

"Any celebration of their promotions now would be at best just an anticlimax to the mad holiday season," sums up one of the Navy ladies.

Romance stole the spotlight from Rear Admiral-elect George Randolph Cooper—his son's romance.

JUST AT THE time the promotion was announced Lieut. (j.g.) George Randolph Cooper, jr., and Nancy Misson announced their engagement. "And we all were so thrilled we haven't time to celebrate anything else," Mrs. Cooper gaily reports.

Capt. Stanhope Cotton Rings' wife claims that frenzied holiday activities during the past few weeks dominated all celebrating in her household, and that her husband's boost to a Rear Admiral hasn't caused the excitement it might have at another season.

Town's Filled With Titles

By Marie McNair

THE TOWN'S filling up with interesting post-holiday visitors.

Arriving yesterday were the Robert Hutchinsons of Tunbridge Wells, Kent, England; Countess de Marenches, on her annual visit, and Baroness Gourgaud, who was Eva Gebhardt of New York.

Already here at the Mayflower for a stay of some weeks are Prince and Princess Christian of Hesse—she was Elizabeth Reid Rogers of Washington—who are shunning all festivities because of the recent death of the Princess' father.

Robert Hutchinson, born in the United States, did a grand job as the director of the Eagle Club in London—hangout for the American fliers who joined up with the RAF, before our entry into the war. Mrs. Hutchinson, who's British, is the sister of Eva LeGallienne, stage star, and is a personage in her own right. She's a member of the house committee of Dartmouth House, English-Speaking Union headquarters in London, and was interior decorator for Concord House, the new English-Speaking Union's building directly across the street.

Story-Book Romance

THERE'S a story-book romance woven around the German-born prince and his American princess.

When the Rogers took their debutante daughter abroad in 1915, she met and fell in love with Prince Christian, member of Germany's ruling family. Because she was of "inferior rank" there was a morganatic marriage with the title of Baroness Barchfield conferred upon the prince's bride. It was not until six years later that the reigning grand duke conferred upon her outright the title of princess.

Until the war Prince and Princess Christian lived in London, and spent much time in Switzerland and on the French Riviera. Now they're spending more and more time in this country where their two sons, Princes Waldemar and Richand yearn for a rancher's life in Texas.

First party for American-born Countess de Marenches will be the luncheon today to be given by Judge and Mrs. Stephen Robert Collins, up for the weekend from Chester Hall, their estate at Chestertown, Md.

Staying at Sulgrave Club

THE COUNTESS, sister of Mrs. Henry Downe who was America's leading hostess in Paris before the war, arrived yesterday and is staying at the Sulgrave Club.

Hjalmar Procope, the handsomest diplomat in Washington before the war, who was back for a brief visit this week, returned on Friday to New York.

A lawyer now, with a Swedish wife, the former Minister of Finland expects to bring her with him when he returns next week.

The new Mme. Procope is the daughter of a leading Swedish industralist, has two children.

Streamlining the Senators

THE NEW LOOK has come to the Senate.

Senator Tom Connally is shorn of his white statesman's locks, has a new close hair trim, which makes him look years younger. Senator Arthur Vandenberg and Senator Homer Ferguson have both shed pounds, now have their boyish "figgers" again. That recent trip to Europe and India was Senator Ferguson's blessing in disguise. Parting with Mrs. Ferguson in Cairo, the Senator proceeded to India with colleagues on the Marshall Plan inspection trip. The spicy food of India wasn't just what the doctor ordered. The result: a slight digestive disturbance.

"I just watched the monkeys for a few days," says the Senator. "They ate only bananas, and for 10 days so did I."

The Senator tips the scales now at 187—his exact weight when he graduated from college.

The Washington Post

PLANS ARE IN THE MAKING for a benefit fashion show to be held January 31 at the Mayflower Hotel, proceeds to go to the furnishing of a nursery at the new Providence Hospital. Meeting this week to discuss the event were Mrs. J. Raymond Raedy (left) president of the Women's Board; Mrs. James Fadeley, president of the fashion show committee, and Mrs. Howard Mitchell, wife of the National Symphony Orchestra conductor.

Former Senator Announces His Daughter's Engagement

Former Senator and Mrs. D. Worth Clark of Washington and Pocatello, Idaho, announce the engagement of their daughter, Nancy Lee, to William Donald Wurzberger, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Wurzberger of Baltimore.

Miss Clark is a graduate of Goucher College, and for the past six months has been employed at the college as assistant to the Director of Admissions.

Mr. Wurzberger attended the University of Pennsylvania, and during the war served as a lieutenant in the Air Force. He is associated with his father in the lumber business in Baltimore.

Fela—Fox

Mr. and Mrs. Peter P. Fela of Trucksville, Pa., announce the engagement of their daughter, Doris Patricia, to Jesse T. Fox, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse T. Fox of Hyattsville, Md.

New Faces

Senator's Creed: Boost Farmer, Small Business

By Mary Van Rensselaer Thayer

"I'M WALKING light, speaking low," grinned Kansan Harry Darby, the only new Republican Senator, "and my appointment was a complete surprise. I've never sought public office—and that still goes! But I've been active in politics since 1928 when I managed Clyde Reed's campaign for Governor."

Now, the tall, broad-shouldered, friendly Darby will round out the uncompleted term of his friend, the late Senator Reed. Senator Darby is a manufacturer by vocation, a farmer by avocation. He heads a small business manufacturing steel plate, farm machinery, and structural steel in Kansas City, Kans. But five months of the year he lives on a ranch at Bonner Springs, Kans., where he raises Hereford cattle and Hampshire pigs.

Helps Farm Youth

He's proud of being an Honorary American Farmer, takes great interest in the Future Farmers of America (boys and girls 18 to 22 or 23 years old) and is chairman of a committee to raise three quarters of a million dollars to build a training ground for 4-H Club members on a ranch at Rock Springs.

For 20 years Senator Darby has been president of the American Royal Livestock and Horse Show, a terrific biannual event featuring a spring rodeo and showing of dairy cattle, and an autumn competition for beef cattle, saddle horses and hunters.

Boosts Small-Business Man

In the Senate he'll do all he can for soil conservation, agricultural benefits, small businesses. The Senator believes that by maintaining free enterprise and boosting the small, independent businessman, young people are encouraged and feel they have future opportunity.

Though Senator Darby's a mere 53, the youngest of his four daughters is 21. One of his three highly appreciated sons-in-law is Ray Evans, the All-American football and basketball player. Just to show what a grip farming has on the Darby family, the first word his youngest daughter spoke was "lespedeza"—the scientific name for a variety of pasture grass, the Senator says!

Question for a Quest

AN ENTHUSIASTIC, and presumably young, lady writes the following letter to this department: "Look, darling, you did such a grand piece of research on the meaning of Wassail and Xmas, only next do as good a job on something which fills the mind of the curious gals of today. The question or quest to work on is this: What is happening to men of this generation that they lend themselves to become cushions or ladders for ambitious, matrimonially bent gals? Especially males of the name Simpson. How come male Simpsons marry as stopgaps? Just take a look at the record of the three ex-Mrs. Simpsons. Is there a league of male Simpsons who have banded together to promote the matrimonial ambitions of American glamour girls?"

It sounds like collusion—and an interesting research subject.

Academy Set Cheers Choice of Brass

By Anne Dorsey Beall

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 7.—The recently announced assignment of Vice Admiral Harry W. Hill to succeed Rear Admiral James L. Holloway, jr., as superintendent of the U. S. Naval Academy is being enthusiastically received by the Hills' numerous friends in Annapolis and Anne Arundel County. Not only has Admiral Hill served two tours of duty here, but Mrs. Hill, a niece of the Misses Stockett of Prince George st., is a "native" of this section, and has spent much of her life in Annapolis.

Admiral and Mrs. Hill, who have two children, Miss Elizabeth Stockett Hill and Lieut. John Clayton Hill 2d, are extremely popular.

Admiral and Mrs. Holloway, too, are very much liked in Annapolis and will be greatly missed when Admiral Holloway leaves to undertake his new duty as commander of the cruiser force of the Atlantic Fleet.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Lee of Great Meadow have announced the engagement of their daughter, Charlotte Elizabeth, to Lieut. Comdr. William Welch Evans, USNR, son of Mr. and Mrs. George T. Evans of Alhambra, Calif. Miss Lee attended Hannah More Academy at Reisterstown, Md., and is a graduate of the Annapolis Business College.

Lieutenant Commander Evans was graduated from the University of California at Los Angeles and received his master's degree from the University of Southern California. He is now attached to the department of English, History and Government at the Naval Academy.

A custom which became traditional in the long administration of the late Gov. Albert C. Ritchie—"open house" for all the people of Maryland, following a private reception for officers of the Maryland National Guard—was observed by Gov. William Preston Lane, jr., and his family on Monday, when "Government House," the home of Maryland's chief executive, was alive with visitors from noon until 7 p. m.

The party for the National Guard officers began at noon, and from 4 to 7 o'clock, Gov. and Mrs. Lane and their daughters welcomed the hundreds of Marylanders who gathered from all parts of the State to wish them "a happy New Year!"

Guests over the Christmas holidays of Governor and Mrs. Lane were Mrs. Lane's mother, Mrs. Lewis Byron, and Miss Helen Bishop of Hagerstown, who spent a few days with them and the Misses Dorothy and Jean Lane.

A number of St. John's College couples who remained in Annapolis for the holidays were entertained informally Wednesday night by Richard D. Weigle, president of St. John's, and Mrs. Weigle, at their home in Wardour.

A cocktail party for many members of the younger set from Annapolis and Washington was given the evening of December 29 in honor of Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. S. M. Decker, by Mrs. Decker's parents, Capt. W. Taylor Smith, USN (retired), and Mrs. Smith at Acton, their beautiful old home in Murray Hill.

Commander and Mrs. Decker left Mare Island, Calif., recently and have been visiting Capt. and Mrs. Smith over the holidays. They will be here until the latter part of January, when they leave for Turkey, where Commander Decker has been ordered to duty.

The holiday period brought announcement of many engagements of much interest to Annapolitans and naval people stationed here.

Comdr. and Mrs. Ernest W. Rogers of St. Margaret's announced the engagement of their daughter, Betsy Ann, to Robert H. Ziegler, son of A. H. Ziegler of Ketchikan, Alaska, and Mrs. Lilian Windfohr Reynolds of Baltimore.

Miss Rogers attended the University of Maryland and Annapolis Business College and is a member of the Tau Omicron Phi Sorority in Annapolis. Mr. Ziegler, a graduate of the University of Virginia Law School, also attended St. James School and Charlotte Hall.

The wedding will take place January 14 in St. Margaret's Westminster Parish.

Two Virginia Builders Plan 1850 Homes in 1950

Prices Range From $8650 To $10,500

By Conrad P. Harness

TWO veteran Virginia builders have announced plans to erect 1850 homes in the Washington area during 1950. Homes will sell in the $8650 to $11,000 price brackets, with only small cash down payments required.

Milton G. Smith has started 50 new 2-bedroom bungalows in his Burgundy Village project in Alexandria and plans to build 350 homes on the 100-acre tract. It is located between Telegraph rd. and Duke st., at Seminary rd., a short distance from downtown Alexandria and at close driving distance to Washington.

Homes of cedar shingle exterior construction will range from $8650 for the regular bungalow to $9000 for a bungalow with expansible attic. Kitchens will be equipped with a refrigerator, range, double sink and garbage disposal.

Also Erecting Ramblelrs

FINANCING is $500 down, and $55 to $57.50 per month. The developer said 8 acres in the heart of the subdivision had been set aside for a public school. There will be a five-acre shopping center.

Smith is also developing the Berkshire subdivision, a project of higher priced homes off Lee Highway in Arlington. Further plans there include 25 more modern ramblers in the $17,000 to $19,000 price range.

The largest project of single family homes announced so far for 1950 is that of M. T. Broyhill & Sons, large-scale Arlington building and development organization. They built Country Club Hills, Country Club View and other North Arlington subdivisions.

Site of their newest endeavor, scheduled for a March 15 ground breaking, is a 200-acre tract off New Hampshire ave. ext., northeast of University Lane, near the Prince Georges and Montgomery County line. The area was part of the vast McCormick-Goodhart estate, most of which has been sold for apartment sites.

Six hundred 3-bedroom brick homes, set on concrete slabs, will be erected there. The proposed price is $10,000 and will include such quality items as a ceramic tile bathroom, oak flooring and fully equipped kitchen, according to Joel Broyhill, firm official.

Homes to Be Tested

THE floor area will be approximately 26 by 35 feet, or 900 square feet. Completed homes will be sold under the GI plan, with $500 cash down payments. Funds in excess of settlement charges will be refunded to purchasers.

Broyhill said his firm would start immediately on 17 "test" homes, exact duplicates of the homes to be erected in Maryland, on vacant lots on S. Edson st., just off Lee blvd. in Arlington.

If any "bugs" develop during actual construction, he said, they could be corrected immediately in the test homes.

First tenants at the huge Langley Park Apartments, New Hampshire ave. at University Lane, Md., are expected to move in the 1550-unit project sometime in March, according to Standard Construction Co., builders. The tract was formerly part of the land belonging to McCormick-Goodhart estate. A 30-store shopping center, with a movie house, will start construction April 1. Rents at Langley Park have not been set yet, but are expected to be around $75 for a one-bedroom unit, $85 for two bedrooms. Dotted lines above mark area where 600 3-bedroom brick homes will rise

M. T. Broyhill, sr., together with his son, outlined three more large-scale projects, all in Virginia, all expected to sell at about $10,000. Details of exact locations could not be divulged, it was said, until final contracts are signed on land tracts.

However, the older Broyhill said the firm's building plans for 1950, besides the 600 Maryland homes, included 600 near Falls Church and a possible 700 in the McLean-Vienna section of Fairfax County.

JOEL BROYHILL painted a picture of home building prosperity for 1950. He said there was a large, unfilled demand for $10,000 homes, that mortgage financing had eased up considerably and that plenty of funds were available to his firm at 4 percent interest.

M. T. Broyhill & Sons expects to start at least 1500 separate single-family homes during 1950, far topping their 350 units in 1949. These units, however, were on a custom-built basis, and required a great deal of design and engineering which will not be necessary in the smaller homes.

Two Luxury Apartments Start On Upper Connecticut Avenue

Wiltshire Parkway, 271-unit, 8-story apartment house, has been started at 3701 Connecticut ave. nw. by Wiltshire Corp. A sister apartment, at 3801 Connecticut ave., will be erected at the same time, and will have 301 units. The two structures will be separated by the wooded area of Melvin Hazen Parkway. George T. Santmyers is architect

Twin apartment buildings, both 8 stories high, will rise this year at 3701 and 3801 Connecticut ave. nw., north of the present Broadmoor Apartments. They will be separated by the wooded area of Melvin Hazen Parkway.

The Wiltshire Parkway, with 271 units, plus offices, stores and 180-car garage, will be erected at 3701, while the Wiltshire Crescent. 301 units, is slated for 3801 Connecticut ave. nw.

Both structures will boast the latest equipment and materials. George T. Santmyers is architect. Owner is the Wiltshire Corp., headed by Myer Siegel. Harry A. Lenkin is secretary-treasurer and Morris Lenkin, vice president. Lenkin Construction Co. is the builder.

Estimated building cost of the air-conditioned buildings was put at six million dollars. Details of the project were handled by Archie L. Straub of the Thos. J. Fisher Co., Inc.

Builder Due to Be Named Soon For 350-Unit Belvoir Project

Proposals for construction and operation of a 350-unit rental housing project at Fort Belvoir, Va., are under study, Maj. Gen. Douglas L. Weart, commanding general, has announced. The project will be undertaken by private builders.

A builder to erect the proposed three-million-dollar development is expected to be selected next week. Sixteen bids were submitted. Barring a delay in starting the project, General Weart estimated it would be available for occupancy by military personnel by early fall.

Construction will be under terms of the Wherry Act, designed to spur housing at military and naval installations by FHA insurance of the mortgages up to 90 percent of appraised value.

The building site at Fort Belvoir is on the north side of U. S. Highway No. 1, west of historic Woodlawn Mansion.

Architectural possibilities of units in the development range from single-family homes of prefabricated metal such as the Lustron home, wood construction, to 18-unit cinderblock and brick-veneer structures.

Rents will be within the means of personnel station at the post, General Weart said.

30 SE Units Planned

Plans have been completed for a building program of 50 units comprising flats and two-story apartment buildings on B, 34th and 35th sts. se. by J. H. Realty Co., owners and builders.

12-Story Office To Rise on Chesley Site

Demolition of the three-story Chesley Building, fronting on both New York ave. and H sts. nw., between 13th and 14th sts., will start soon to make way for a proposed 12-story and basement office building.

The structure, for which a building contract is expected to be let within two weeks, will occupy the site of the Chesley Building plus the parking lot at H, 14th sts. and New York ave. Owner is the Virginia Hotel Co.

Eight tenants, mainly small retail stores with offices on the ground level, occupied space in the building which extended through from H st. to New York ave., adjacent to the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church.

Arrow Wrecking & Lumber Co. was awarded a $2685 contract to raze the structure.

Annapolis Club Purchased by D. C. Broker

PAUL S. ANDERSON, local realty broker, has purchased the Annapolis Roads Club at Annapolis, Md. The property includes a large clubhouse, beachhouse, nine-hole golf course and about 340 acres of wooded and beach sites.

ANDERSON

The sales price was not disclosed but the property was quoted last summer at about $200,000. Anderson is forming the Annapolis Roads, Inc., to own and operate the club which was built in 1932 and has been a prominent Chesapeake Bay landmark ever since.

About 400 home sites will be put up for sale when site surveys have been completed. Anderson said it was the first time to his knowledge that home site sales have followed the development of recreational facilities.

Usually, he pointed out, lots are sold first and then recreational facilities are sometimes added. Large-scale home-building operations are expected to get under way this summer. Homes will be erected for all-year occupancy.

Experts' Topic To Be Climate And Building

The effect of climatic conditions on design and construction of homes will be explored here by experts in a two-day conference Wednesday and Thursday at the National Academy of Sciences auditorium. Sponsor is the Building Research Advisory Board of the National Research Council.

Thirty weather scientists, building technologists and architects from this country and Canada will speak.

The public is invited to a round-table discussion Wednesday night at the United States Chamber of Commerce, Connecticut at H sts. nw., according to William H. Scheick, executive director of the building board.

Washington area men who will participate include Dr. Paul Siple of the Department of the Army; Dr. Helmut Landsberg, Research and Development Board; Arnold Court, Quartermaster Corps; Francis W. It's the Rust, Not the Dust

The showing of nailheads through a thin coat of plaster or filler is not due to the accumulation of dust on the walls, as many suppose, but to rust forming on the nailheads. This is more noticeable on the inner surface of outside walls and in bathrooms where moisture is frequently present. Touching up the spots with shellac will generally overcome this trouble. Wallboard should also be put up with coated or non-oxidizing nails.

Here and There in D. C. Real Estate Offices

WHAT does the New Year hold for the real estate market? The answer is expected to be presented January 9 in a one-day series of lectures conducted by James C. Downs, jr., business analyst and president of Real Estate Research Corp., Chicago, according to an announcement by Oliver M. Walker, president, Washington Real Estate Board, sponsors of the seminar.

Downs will appraise the course of the real estate business, pointing out new selling techniques, in the light of the general economic and financial outlook for 1950. The lectures will be held at the Statler Hotel.

Registrations for the seminar are being accepted by Charles J. Rush, board executive secretary.

M. K. Singer of 600 10th st. sw. inquires to to whether any plans for redevelopment of the area bounded by Maine ave., 7th and D sts. sw. have been proposed. "It would appear to me that this part of the city is ripe for rebuilding and redevelopment inasmuch as it is so close to water, rail and air facilities and is so close to the heart of the financial and business districts of the city." Any ideas, readers?

Headlines, weekly newsletter of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, reports: "What the Administration will recommend in housing legislation at the new session of Congress was reported being developed last week. Direct Government loans to veterans and to cooperatives are not expected to be advocated. The feasibility of 100 percent insured mortgages to spark co-op development is being considered instead. The Housing and Home Finance Agency, it is anticipated, will recommend that Title VI be allowed to expire March 1, 1950, and that Section 207 be liberalized to take up some of the slack in rental housing construction. Section 207, under the contemplated plan, would authorize 90 percent mortgages, instead of the 80 percent as now, retain the long-term valuation basis of computation, instead of adopting the current cost as in Title VI."

The Housing Letter, a digest of realty trends, predicts that rent control will once more occupy legislative headlines, with the preliminary shots already being fired. The Administration has indicated that controls will be requested to be extended beyond the present expiration date of June 30, 1950. Realty groups will continue their fight for decontrol.

AN ARTICLE in the Sunday real estate section of December 18, comparing Washington housing that in New York, particularly Levittown, has produced some interesting comments from William J. Levitt, president of Levitt & Sons, Inc.

A Washington builder had stated that the $7990 price tag on Levitt homes was made possible, in part, though availability of cheap, flat land that required little improvement prior to actual construction operations.

"Our average price for land, unimproved," Levitt said, "is $2500 per acre. Every subdivision map filed in the State of New York must be accompanied by very detailed topographical outlines. The road and development specifications . . . are the most rigid . . . in the country. Our paved road consists of a 6-inch concrete base, 30 feet wide, surfaced with 1½ inches of macadam black top, with concrete curbs and gutters. Our underground storm drainage sewers are the most elaborate and empty into huge recharge basins, constructed by us and then dedicated without charge to the municipal authorities.

"Water mains, hydrants, valves and fittings are installed by us at our own expense and dedicated to the municipal authorities for the munificent sum of $1." Levitt, discussing the house, said it had Tracy all-steel cabinets with stainless steel double drainboard sink, the same type recently installed in the White House, a refrigerator, range, Bendix washer, Venetian blinds, Thermopane insulated glass and all fixed sash.

The price tag, he added, includes all legal fees, VA and FHA appraisal charges, free fire insurance and property taxes for one year.

What would the Levittown house cost in Washington if erected by the Levitts? "Taking everything into consideration we think that the same house erected (in a local subdivision—ed.) could be built to sell to the Washington public for $7000! Some day we hope to be able to come down your way and give your people an actual demonstration," he declared.

Al Baker & Son, Alexandria realty firm, has announced the addition to their staff of James Wynn, formerly an administrative officer with the Adjutant General's Office, Department of the Army. Other new additions include Mrs. Ruby A. Eyler, supervisor of the rental department, and Miss Gertrude G. Gibson, sales force.

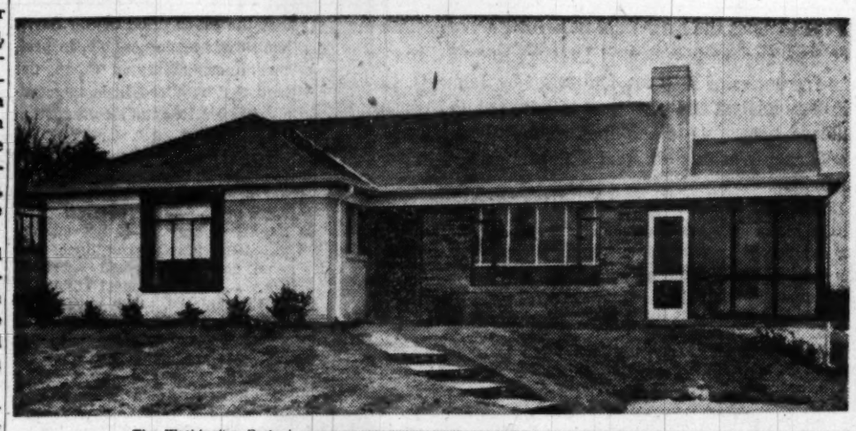
Building Contracts Increase 78 Pct. In Washington

Investment commitments for building and engineering works, as measured by valuation of contracts awarded, increased 78 percent in the District of Columbia this year through the first eleven months, as compared with the same period of last year, according to F. W. Dodge Corporation, a fact-finding organization for the construction industry.

The eleven-month total of all awards was $117,342,000, and reflected a gain of 60 percent in nonresidential work, an increase of 149 percent in residential awards, and a 3 percent decline in engineering works.

Contracts awarded in the Washington metropolitan area during the first eleven months of this year amounted to $309,737,000, an increase of 47 percent over the corresponding period of last year.

Ramblers Starting at $18,500 Planned in Alta Vista Terrace



The Washington Post

Two sample ramblers just completed on Anniston rd., Alta Vista Terrace, Bethesda, Md., by Billingsley & Korzendorfer, Inc. Similar homes in the project sell from $18,500 to $22,500, the firm reports.

A large-scale building program of $18,500 to $22,500 ramblers has been announced for 1950 completion by Billingsley & Korzendorfer, Inc., Maryland building firm.

Six ramblers have just been completed in Alta Vista Terrace, off Old Georgetown rd., Bethesda, and 35 more are to be completed by summer. Five different floor plans are used.

Each home will be different, a firm official stated, with varying roof lines, brick and wood exteriors, and other distinctive features.

In addition to the Alta Vista Terrace site, the firm has three sample ramblers completed in Chevy Chase Manor, postwar subdivision off Western ave. and Brookville rd. Twenty-five more are planned for erection there.

Nine Frame Homes Planned in Hyattsville

Nine 2-story and basement homes will be erected in the 5800 block of 14th pl. and the 1300 block of Madison st., Hyattsville, Md., according to present plans of the City Engineering and Construction Corp.

Units will be frame, with a 28-by-20 foot floor area. A permit application has been filed.

Tens of thousands of crossings of plants are sometimes required to produce a distinctive new type.

New Homes Announced for Prince Georges

The nice weather has speeded building plans of Prince Georges developers, according to construction plans announced the past week.

Twenty-five homes are scheduled to rise in the Gregory Estates section of Seat Pleasant, just over the District line. This is the continuation of a large-scale building project. Homes will be 1½-story, no basement, of frame construction. Builder is Construction Enterprises, Inc., of Alexandria, Va.

Ralph H. Wagner will build 12 2-story dwellings in the 4400 and 4500 blocks of 34th st., Brentwood.

Ten homes are scheduled for the 5000 block of Cree lane, in College Park, by Northeast Development Corp. They will be one-story brick ramblers, with no basement.

Wright Construction Corp. will erect nine 1½-story frame houses in the 9700 block of 52d ave., College Park.

130 Home Permits Issued in Arlington

Permits for 130 homes formed the bulk of the $2,507,715 in dollar volume of building permits issued during November by the Arlington County Office of the building inspector.

This figure was slightly higher than the $2,347,273 in October, and well over the following November months: $1,203,878 in 1948; $1,266,864 in 1947; and $794,588 in 1946.

'Tangle' Assailed

Performance Codes Urged For Building

A TANGLE of outmoded building codes, enforced by thousands of towns and cities, is strangling building progress and keeping housing costs on a needlessly high level, declares Holman Harvey in the current Reader's Digest.

Harvey charges that the variance in building codes from one town to another prevents mass production economies because manufacturers must make scores of sizes, designs and models to meet widely different regulations. Outmoded codes, preventing or delaying the use of money-saving products, have caused prefabricated housing to suffer severe reverses.

Harvey says a single New York county has 65 different building codes which boost costs as much as 25 percent. In Pennsylvania's Allegheny County, 129 subdivisions maintain 129 diverse codes.

New materials, such as plastic wall tile, composition wallboards, modern types of insulation, glass brick and rustless aluminum nails, developed in the past 10 years, are ruled out in many areas because 55 percent of building codes are more than 10 years old.

He urges the adoption, within States, of uniform "performance" codes to replace "specification" codes. Real performance codes, based on what materials will do rather than what they are made of, would never be outmoded, never require revision and would help simplify the Nation's housing problems, the author states.

Realty Roundup

House, will be the main speaker at the regular Monday luncheon meeting of the Washington Building Congress at the Mayflower.

He will discuss the reconstruction of the White House and some of the architectural and engineering problems involved.

Raymond M. Foley, RHFA Administration, states that the United States must build more than one million housing units each year to meet the Nation's housing requirements in the next decade. Last year's output topped the million mark for the first time in history.

The 1949 record represents the minimum, not the maximum, level of production we must have "to make real progress toward the goal of a decent home for every American family," he reported.

Local men will take part in the 1950 Middle Atlantic Conference, sponsored by the Building Owners and Managers Association, at Absecon, N. J., January 16 and 17. James E. Douglas, president of the local group, will discuss "Apartment Operating Costs." Irwin Altman of Cafritz Co. will describe effects of rent control on apartment operations. Robert G. Van Vranken of Weaver Bros. will tell about "Operating an Apartment-Office Building." Charles J. Bauer, executive secretary of the local chapter, will speak on "Rental Value of Added Air Conditioning." George W. Love, manager of the Southern Building, will participate in a five-city panel on "Office Rental Conditions." Lew S. Mohler, Transportation Building manager, will participate in a "Modernization Clinic." Amos K. Payne, Shoreham Building manager, will report in a panel on labor conditions. Harry J. Gerrity will discuss the wage-hour law. Marshall Davis, of Bliss Properties, is vice president of the Middle Atlantic Conference.

Melvin C. Russell, whose wartime job was the finding and leasing of space for the Government's war agencies, has retired from the Public Buildings Service to his Spenceville, Md., Farm. He leased over seven million square feet of space here. Some of the buildings used were funeral homes, night clubs, skating rinks and old breweries, plus several old-time Washington mansions.

30 $8000 Prefabs To Be Erected

Thirty Gunnison prefabricated 2-bedroom bungalows, slated to sell for around $8000, will be erected on Julep ave., near Carroll Knolls, off Georgia ave. ext., Silver Spring, Md. Partners in the operation are Wallace B. Agnew, John Devereux and Samuel Walker. The latter is the Gunnison distributor here.

The lots were sold to the group by Yellott and Co. Walker has announced plans for another group of Gunnison homes to be erected at Rock Creek Knolls. Prices will be $9350 and $8550.

Gelman Gets Permits For 72 Brookville Units

Gelman Construction Co., has been issued building permits for 72 more homes in its proposed Brookville project of 574 units off Georgia ave. in Silver Spring, Md. Over 90 of the three-bedroom homes were sold at the first showing at prices under $11,000.

The same firm is building the Gelmare Towers Apartment house on Columbia rd. nw., off Sixteenth st. nw. and communities in other parts of Silver Spring and Bethesda.

Product Previews

RADICAL changes in everything from cooking to conventions are likely in the 50 years to come if electrical engineers turn out inventions at the rate they maintained the last half century.

Ten electronic scientists paused at the end of the first half of the twentieth century to peer into the future on the pages of the January issue of Westinghouse Engineer, a company publication.

They foresee such wonders as "bottled sunlight" for home lighting, kitchen ranges that can't burn the beans and the decline of business conventions.

Westinghouse Electric Corp. engineers predicted bottled sunlight would come from highly efficient phosphor powders mixed into building material, paint or wallpaper. The phosphors would slowly send out at night the light energy they absorbed by day.

Electronic heat for cooking is seen as a boon to cooks. The stove of the future, the magazine said, will provide automatic surface cooking, regulated by the temperature control (as in ovens now). The idea is to cook vegetables and other foods at the proper rate without burning or any need to watch to make sure the water does not boil away.

Westinghouse Vice President John H. Ashbaugh said the stove, to be mass produced at "reasonable cost," will be ready in "not too many years."

In years to come, the engineers speculated, the traditional business convention may be outmoded. Its substitute may well be telephone television. Such a set-up would allow across-the-desk conversations between men many miles apart. They would no longer need spend time and money traveling to conventions.

Here, briefly, are some of the other probable inventions to watch for:

Underground transmission of electric power across the Nation to eliminate lightning and weather hazards.

Automatic indoor climate control.

Atomic power plants to supplement or replace present coal, water and oil energy sources. This depends on finding an adequate supply of atomic fuel.

Electric motors for home equipment and industry that will have indefinite life and be proof against burning out.

SETTING A FINE EXAMPLE IN THE NEW YEAR, Nathan Poole, president of Drury Realty Co., has bought 1525 44th st. nw., from John E. Linder of South Carolina, in cooperation with the office of C. Newton Jeffress. The present occupants, Capt. and Mrs. George B. Parks have taken a house in Burleith. Mr. and Mrs. Poole will take over their new home about February 1.

MRS. BOYLE

Walker-Dunlop Co.'s Georgetown office reports it has sold 5022 V st. nw., to Miss Gertrude Shaw. This trim little Williamsburg house with the small brook winding through the yard was sold for Attorney and Mrs. William L. McGovern, who with three young sons demanding more room, have leased 6914 Wilson la., Bannockburn Heights. 5033 V has been sold to Mr. and Mrs. Richard Friedman for Mr. and Mrs. Archie Robertson. Friedman is with the State Department and if you read the June 13th issue of Life you know that Robertson's "lively memories of his strict but happy Baptist boyhood" are being incorporated in a book entitled "That Old-Time Religion," to be published shortly by Houghton-Mifflin Co. The same office has also leased 5025 for Mrs. Dorothy Radford, who is on an extended visit in Memphis, Tenn., to Lieut. and Mrs. Glenn Medick who have recently come to Washington from Honolulu.

MR. AND MRS. AMORY S. CARHART, Jr., have leased the property at 3125 Nebraska ave. nw., from Mr. and Mrs. Frank L. Dennis through the office of Laura Harlan & Co. Carhart is a travel representative with the American Express Co. and Dennis, assistant managing editor of The Washington Post on leave of absence, is in Europe with ECA.

THE BIG BRICK RAMBLER at 6909 Massachusetts ave. nw., has been sold to Mr. and Mrs. Albert Lewis Nowicki by Yellott & Co. for William Kaiser. Nowicki is chief of the planning staff of the Army Map Service. Mrs. Nowicki is with the Research Center at the Bethesda Naval Hospital.

SPEAKING OF RAMBLERS, Rear Admiral James D. Barner, USN (ret.) and Mrs. Barner have bought 9603 Glencrest la., Larchmont Knolls, Md., through Mrs. Ruth Parker Love of the Chevy Chase Realty Co. Their little Dutch colonial house at 2945 Brandywine st. nw., was sold to Dr. and Mrs. Harold L. Hirsh through the same office. Admiral Barner is the former commander of the aircraft carrier Shangri-La. When Doolittle's raiders made the first attack on Tokyo and reporters questioned President Roosevelt as to where the planes came from, he replied "Who knows? Perhaps from Shangri-La." The name caught the public's fancy and was given to one of the big carriers launched soon after.

HOWARD McPECK'S OFFICE REPORTS the recent sale of 1515 28th st. nw., to Mr. and Mrs. Philip Thayer for William Elliott. Mr. Thayer is dean of the School of Advanced International Studies at 1906 Florida ave. nw. and also conducts a summer school at Peterboro, N. H.

The home at 3235 R st. nw. has been sold by Dorothy Wood's office for Mrs. Civilise Schenck, who is living in Warwick, Bermuda, to Mr. and Mrs. John Lawrence Barnard of the State Department. The Barnards' former home at 3104 R st., has been sold to Mr. and Mrs. William L. Clark through the office of De Sibour.

We'll be checking on the moving vans again next Sunday!

Builders Ready to Establish Private Mortgage Exchange

By Stephen G. Thompson
NYHT News Service

SWITCHING at long last from words and resolutions to action, the National Association of Home Builders has decided to establish its own mortgage exchange corporation in a move to stimulate a private-enterprise secondary mortgage market and reduce or eliminate the need for dependence on Federal financing in this phase of their operations.

Over the past year, builders and real estate interests have become increasingly fearful that constant Government purchasing of mortgages from leading institutions—so the latter would obtain more cash again to make additional building and home purchase loans—amounted, in effect, to only slightly disguised direct lending by the Government. This, they have felt, would lead eventually to open, undisguised Government lending to the general public in a generally socialistic pattern.

According to Tom Coogan of Miami, chairman of the mortgage finance committee, the association plans to incorporate its new mortgage exchange before the end of February, and it probably will make its headquarters in New York.

Small Builder Aid

THE basic purpose of the exchange, Mr. Coogan said, will be to serve and cooperate with insurance companies and other large financial institutions. It will avoid any direct purchases of mortgages itself except under unusual circumstances in which members in a particular district might require special assistance or relief from unreasonable premiums. Rather, it will strive, for instance, to assemble small numbers of scattered mortgages into the "big packages" that are the only business that some of the largest secondary market purchasers will consider.

It also is planned to have the exchange conduct a comprehensive campaign to develop and expand new and additional sources of mortgage funds.

Stockholders of the exchange will be limited to active builder members of the National Association of Home Builders, but it will be managed with a view to being self-supporting and to render a service to members, rather than to make a profit. It will function as a separate corporate entity, and its initial capitalization, and other details, will be announced later.

ACCORDING to Mr. Coogan, it is not likely that the operations of the Federal National Mortgage Association, the Government's mortgage-purchasing agency, can be curtailed immediately, although it is hoped that the activity of the exchange and increased secondary market purchases by private capital might cause it to revert to only an emergency standby role within two years.

An indication of the seriousness with which the National Association of Home Builders has viewed the growing threat of direct Government lending and consequent increased socialistic Government interference and regulation was given in "The Mortgage Mart" column of Herbert S. Colton, Washington attorney and NAHB counsel, in the December issue of the NAHB Correlator.

"Easily the most noteworthy factor in mortgage financing is its increasing dependence upon a Federally supported secondary market," he wrote. "It has been estimated that as much as 20 percent of residential loans now being made are protected by FNMA purchase commitments. (Under present statutes FNMA is authorized to purchase up to $2,500,000,000 of mortgages.)

"This column, in common with other observers of the mortgage market, has several times pointed out this trend and the inevitable choice between two alternatives, either eventual direct Government lending or expansion and development of the private secondary market . . .

"It is probably no exaggeration to say that failure of the industry to provide its own private facilities will make certain the enactment of a Federal direct lending program. The only question is whether, even asuming early creation of such private instrumentalities, they could become effective in time to demonstrate the purely political basis of pressure for direct Government lending."

Real Estate Board Heads Meet Here

About 500 presidents of local real estate boards are in town for a week's conference at the Statler Hotel, called by the National Association of Real Estate Boards. Meetings will extend through January 12.

Robert Gerholz, of Flint, Mich., will be installed as national president of the realtor association Tuesday night. This Washington meeting is an annual event at which time plans for realtor activities and Federal legislation are discussed.

The original forest area of the United States is estimated at 820 million acres—nearly half the country's land area.

Construction volume in the District during December, as measured by building permits issued, took nearly a two-million-dollar jump over November, the report of the District Building Inspector's Office reveals.

The December total was $6,626,300, with homes, compared with $4,856,701 and 102 homes in November. December, 1948, the volume was only $3,764,108.

This is the second group of a proposed 147 home project.

A-Plant Contracts Boost Construction

New York, Jan. 7 (AP).—Engineering construction contracts awarded the four working days of this week jumped to a near-record $323,398,000, Engineering News-Record reported today.

The total was boosted by 200 million dollars in contracts awarded by General Electric for expansion of the atomic energy plant at Hanford Works in Richmond, Wash.

The over-all volume approached the 362 million dollar high recorded during one week of December, 1948. It was 384 percent above the preceding four-day week's $66,858,000 and 160 percent above the $124,485,000 for the corresponding four-day week of 1949.

Plans for Factory Use Of Slum Areas Studied

Possibilities for turning blighted metropolitan areas into sites for modern industrial plants are being examined by the Society of Industrial Realtors.

Industrial refuse of slum land will be discussed here, Tuesday by SIR members and officials of the Housing and Home Finance Agency. The latter is responsible for administering the $1,500,000,000 Slum Clearance and Urban Redevelopment program, authorized by Congress last year.

They Finally Turned 'Pursuit of Happiness' Into a Musical Show

By Richard L. Coe

PHILADELPHIA, JAN. 7—There's nothing like tryout time of musical shows for a glimpse of theater's complexities.

The Theater Guild's long-anticipated musical version of "The Pursuit of Happiness" is a clear example. "Alive and Kicking," a Broadway-bound revue, is another.

"Arms and the Girl" is the new title for the Lawrence Langner-Armina Marshall comedy that's been manna to summer stock and amateur life for 16 years. The music is by Morton Gould (his "Interplay" was one of his best). The score was to have been done by someone else who evidently didn't deliver and Gould's music was written to fit the book Herbert and Dorothy Fields and Rouben Mamoulian have adapted from "Pursuit."

The feminine star is Nanette Fabray, the lively, bright brunette whom Washington saw in "Bloomer Girl." Last year she was a happy hit in "Love Life." The male star is a newcomer from Canada via France, Georges Guetary. He's got a far better voice than most musical show males and an assured manner.

Pearl Shines

BUT somehow the most electric figure during the third performance was Pearl Bailey. Miss Bailey has one wingo number, "There Must Be Something Better Than Love." "And," she goes on, "IF there is, you can have it, I don't want it." As she sings this novel ditty, Pearl takes over "Arms and the Girl" the way no other performer manages to do.

"The Pursuit of Happiness," of course, is that comedy about bundling, the colonial custom of a boy and girl courting in bed to keep warm, with a jagged bundling board tucked ostentatiously between them. It has to do with a Hessian soldier, a Pennsylvania girl who thinks she can be almost as good a general as Washington, a runaway slave from Virginia and an Old Dominion colonel, young, who thinks the Pennsylvania girl is swell.

Apart from Miss Bailey, Horace Armistead's settings of New England in fall and winter are the outstanding atmosphere-setter of "Arms and the Girl." Almost like crayon drawings, these, and always handsome to gaze upon.

The Gould score, which allots another song, "Nothin' for Nothin'" to Miss Bailey, is "pretty" without being melodic, which seems to me not quite enough.

Shades of a Hit

FOR, frankly, there is almost too much here to remind you of how good "Oklahoma!" is. The period compares favorably with that of the "Green Grow the Lilacs" story which inspired that, being nostalgic Americana. And the principals all have their counterparts in the Hammerstein-Rodgers hit. One girl is a combination of Giggling Gertie and Ado Annie. A Connecticut captain is blood ancestor of "Oklahoma!'s" Sheriff Carnes and played by one of the most untiring Andy Carnes, Florenz Ames. A bustling New England housewife could be the beloved Aunt Eller.

In short, the Guild and Director Mamoulian have feared to stray too far from their fabulous hit. For the opening night of "Oklahoma!" (it was called "Away We Go" that Boston evening), Mamoulian had contrived to have a flock of pigeons fly across the stage as the curtain went up. They lost their direction, sailed out to the auditorium and stayed there. Never again were they part of the show.

In the same way, Mamoulian introduces a white horse from which General Washington delivers a final scolding to the heroine. The horse thumps away, obscuring his words and the attempt at realism in the midst of impressionistic settings misfires.

Kidd's Dances

MICHAEL KIDD has done the dances which are not especially outstanding, though neither the plot nor the score gives Kidd much of a chance. Again, the groupings are reminiscent of such scenes as the pre-wedding festivities of "Brigadoon" and Laurey's "Many a New Day" of "Oklahoma!"

But when you've watched the early performances of musicals, you know it's still too early to tell whether "Arms and the Girl" will be whipped into a Guild hit. The next stop, beginning the 16th, will be Boston, that same city where one still active reviewer declared "Away We Go" fated for oblivion. Even with that object lesson in mind, I am tempted to say "Arms and the Girl" hasn't more than a gentle, brief career to look forward to at the moment.

Second of the Philly musicals is "Alive and Kicking," in which the Jack Cole dancers score a solid hit, though the sketches, songs and principals seem insufficient to carry the evening. Cole's dances, however, done by his small, but immensely efficient group, are the real promise of this one.

Over from Gotham to see what doctoring may be done during the one remaining tryout week (Hershey, Pa.) have come such musical comedy medicos as John Murray Anderson and Hassard Short. What role either of these may take is not clear, but their appearance in the audience has underscored that tryout time is the life-or-death period for musical shows.

Close-up—Hammersteins

William Allows He'd Call a Son Oscar

By Tex McCrary and Jinx Falkenburg

"OKLAHOMA" is the first record on Broadway of a teaming-up between Rogers and Hammerstein; but there is an earlier and more important instance:

Thirty-one years ago, Dr. William Rogers, obstetrician, brother of Richard Rodgers, delivered the first son of Oscar Hammerstein 2d. And now the Hammerstein family tree reads like this:

Oscar I, William I, Oscar II, William II ("Billy").

We asked Billy what he would call his first son; he looked at his father, swallowed hard, and said: "Oscar, I guess."

Millions in It

THERE have been two royal families in the American theater—on stage, the Barrymores, and backstage, the Hammersteins. Oscar I made millions in light opera and vaudeville—then lost it all trying to make grand opera popular. A reporter once asked him if he thought there was any money in opera.

"Of course there is money in opera!" roared Oscar I—"Millions And all of it's mine"

Both of his sons profited from his mistakes and stayed away from opera—William made money as a theater owner, the Victoria, and Arthur became a producer of musical comedies, rivalling Ziegfeld and Dillingham.

But the losses of Oscar I soured William on show business, and so his son, Oscar 2d, was sent to Columbia to study law. But at Columbia, Oscar found out that Broadway doesn't end at Fifty-seventh st. — after his father died, he plunged into every college show. A comedian then, he teamed up with a kid named Lorenz Hart—who later wrote the words for Dick Rogers' music.

"Dick Rodgers must still be wondering about that," says Oscar.

'Showboat'

BEFORE Dick and Oscar wrote "Oklahoma," it was Oscar and Jerome Kern, and their greatest work was "Showboat"—and the family figures in that story, too:

Ziegfeld was about to open his new theater that year—he wanted to open with a sure-fire

RKO Brass Stews About 'Stromboli'

By Hedda Hopper

HOLLYWOOD. — All the top executives at RKO huddled for a whole day about "Stromboli." What to do with the film? When to release it, if at all? They've been deluged with criticisms from women's clubs, PTA groups, and other organizations who think sin should be punished, not glorified. After the huddle, the decision was a draw.

Remember Jean Harlow's sexiness in "Hell's Angels?" Well, the same thing's happening to Janet Leigh in "Jet Pilot." Before that one's finished, everybody's going to be calling it "Sex Pilot." . . . Gloria, Harold Lloyd's lovely daughter, received an enormous sapphire and diamond clip from Bill Guasti.

Gloria DeHaven goes into Bill Perlberg's new picture, "I'll Get By," with that talented Helene Stanley, who is playing here in "A La Carte." Also in the cast will be Danny Davenport, who went to Berlin for the airlift picture. Harry James will finish his Twentieth Century contract with this one.

Dan Dailey's still shaky on his pins. He picked up the virus germ in Durango, Colo. Dan tells about the hitch-hiker, who joined the company and said there was a dead man at the foot of the chasm near Durango. The company sent out a searching party, and discovered it was the dummy Dan had thrown off a cliff. It went so far, it was cheaper to get a new dummy than reclaim the old body. . . . I wish Darryl Zanuck would put Dan in an all-acting picture. Sure I love his singing and dancing, but he's one of our best all-round actors. Have you heard him on "Suspense?"

Bing Crosby, Reggie Gardiner, Humphrey Bogart, Buster Collier, Bob Coote, David Niven and Paul MacNamara decided Mike Romanoff should be officially crowned, and brother they did it, with ermine around his shoulders, diamonds and velvet on his head, and a gold scepter which I'm sure he'll use as a swagger stick. Mac's speech was hilarious, and Mike's attempt to answer was even funnier. Dignity, ah dignity, in spite of everything, prevailed. Mike's customers will see his crown under glass in his cafe. After the coronation, the guests ate hot dogs, hamberers, chili from Chasen's, and coffee—all out of a chuck wagon in Mike's back yard.

The Coolest

The Undistilled Garroway's on Radio

By John Crosby

DAVE GARROWAY, otherwise self-referred to as "the very low-pressure guy," "old tiger," and various other odd—or as he would probably say—incandescent labels, has made a fairly large splash on television. But N. B. C. also offers an awful lot of Garroway on radio (11:15 a. m. EST Mondays through Fridays and 10:30 p. m. EST Mondays) where you can sample the pure, undistilled Garroway.

The pure Garroway, I'm informed, is the embodiment of the bop movement. He is, as the bop crowd likes to describe it, a very cool guy. Or to put it in pure bop: "The coolest." The noun is unnecessary.

The idea is to be as languid as possible about everything, and this is expressed by little shrugs little liftings of eyebrows, and small flutterings of hands, by a general bonelessness both in physiognomy and in point of view. One must never get excited about anything. One must be terribly, terribly, terribly casual about everything and relaxed almost to the point of stupor.

DAVE GARROWAY
. . . easy does it

Some Are Cool

THIS, IF IT'S NOT TOO ambitious a word, is the philosophical basis for all the Garraway shows, both radio and television, and it must be admitted from the outset that this philosophy doesn't appeal to just everyone. A great many people are decidedly cool to this very cool guy. In Chicago, where Garroway first got his foot in the door and from which he still broadcasts his network shows, Garroway attracted many devout admirers. There were others—quite an impressive band too—who would like to wring his neck.

For this reason, I have some doubts that Garroway will ever win the popular acceptance of, say, Arthur Godfrey, which, it appears, is N. B. C.'s aim. He is a special taste, possibly a little fey for wide esteem. There have been visible efforts to tone him down, conceivably to avoid this change. He once had an addiction for words like incandescent, tenuous, gruesome, serene, gauzy, protoplasmic, esoteric, hassel, carbohydrated, resilient. He used to address his listeners as "my lissome," "old delicate," "my translucent" and "my tawny." Of a singer he once remarked: "Listen how she holds that note and then she forces her hands around its throat and sort of shakes it."

There is a good deal less of this now, though Garroway still can't quite resist when some tenuous word wells up in his esoteric throat. "You'll find nothing big, nothing upsetting here," he tells his audience on his radio

Twentieth Time Around

That Symphony Campaign Is On Again

By Paul Hume

THE National Symphony Orchestra's annual sustaining fund campaign is here once more.

This is the twentieth time the orchestra has come to the Washington public for help.

Last Sunday The Washington Post told you about events of the past 50 years in this Capital of the Nation.

If we were to tell you about music in Washington in the last 50 years, the most important part of the story would be that of the National Symphony.

Opera at Poli's

THERE was opera in Washington at various times in the last half century. Poli's Theater, removed before this writer ever reached town, is reported to have been a fine house for opera. "Madame Butterfly" of Puccini was sung in Washington for the first time in America. It happened right in the Belasco Theater on October 15, 1906.

The Philadelphia Orchestra has been coming to Washington for nearly 50 years. The Friday Morning Music Club is now in its sixty-sixth year.

Morning musicales in the Mayflower Hotel have had their day and the Friends of Music of Dumbarton Oaks is a tiny babe compared to the older organization once thriving here as the Friends of Music in the Library of Congress.

But, as in many other cities, particularly those that lived a dreamy, Southern existence until the recent war, music was a matter for the powdered few who knew what they wanted, could and would pay for it, and wanted nothing else.

Founded by Kindler

WITH the coming of the National Symphony Orchestra, founded by Hans Kindler in 1931, Washington began to be aware of what music might mean to a community.

You know the story of Kindler's struggles to build and maintain an orchestra. Many of you know some of those whose constant generosity kept the orchestra going when the public's "all" was not enough.

With the influx of newcomers who have swelled the population of Washington and its environs to twice their former size the demand has come for real, vital, new forces in music. No one wants to displace present institutions or great masterworks in the repertoires of those who give concerts.

Growing Up

BUT Washington is growing up musically. It is filling Constitution Hall more often for newer artists and newer music. The great influence of the Library of Congress, and probably greater still of the National Gallery and Phillips Gallery, plus radio station WQQW and the spread of good music through records, has created an ever-growing cell of those who love music and want to hear it often.

We cannot overlook the tremendous possibilities in the newly combined Washington and Cathedral Choral Societies. We do not forget the present season of concerts being heard for the first time in Alexandria and in Georgetown.

But the core of the musical life in this city is, and remains, the National Symphony Orchestra. Its members play for the choral societies.

It gives free concerts for the school children of the District of Columbia as the central fact of a newly invigorated program of music in the schools. It is heard on the air regularly in neighborhood concerts open to the public without charge.

AN ALL-NEGRO cast will present "Tobacco Road" for a two-week run starting Friday at the Howard Theater prior to its New York engagement.

Powell Lindsay gets the plum role of Jeeter Lester, created by Henry Hull. Supporting this noted Negro actor and playwright will be Evelyn Ellis, Jimmy Wright, Helen Dowdy, Dolores Mack, John Tate, John Mark, Baby Joyce, Estelle Hemsley and Cherokee Thornton.

There will be a nightly performance at 8:40 and Saturday and Sunday matinees at 2:40. Seats are now on sale at the District Theaters office, 1212 V st. nw.

Old Smoothies Again Spark Ice-Capades

RETURNING with the "Ice-Capades of 1950," opening a 10-day stand at the Uline Arena Monday, January 23, will be two of the revue's most remarkable skaters, the Old Smoothies.

These are Orrin Markhus and Irma Thomas, whose waltzes invariably stop the show as it nears its last act finale. Both are grandparents and met eight years ago when he, a golf pro, was giving lesons to Mrs. Thomas, a PTA chairman of her Wisconsin township.

Gradually Markhus lured Mrs. Thomas to try his favorite sport and she became so adept as pupil that their partnership on blades was an immediate hit.

Markhus is a large fellow, 255 pounds, and a few years ago decided that perhaps the act would be improved if he reduced a bit. The public didn't cater to the streamlined Markhus and said so.

"Letters poured in expressing concern over my health. They stated that I looked undernourished and emaciated. That did it, and I'm happy to be back to my 255."

Seats for the run are on sale downtown at the Fairway, 1328 G st. nw. The opening night will be a posh affair benefitting the Wellesley Club of Washington.

BARTER VISITORS: Betty Schultz and William Adler have the romantic leads in J. B. Priestleys' "Dangerous Corner," which the Barter Theater of Virginia will present Tuesday, January 17, at Arlington's Washington-Lee High School. Reservations at GLebe 9252

Britten's String Music Honest and Affecting

BRITTEN: Variations on a Theme of Frank Bridge. EDA London 100. $7.

The English are both fascinated with and adept in writing music for stringed instruments. Three major works of this century are cast in that form by Elgar (Introduction and Allegro), Vaughan Williams (Fantasy on a Theme of Thomas Tallis), and Britten—the present opus.

There is also a beautiful Capriol Suite by Peter Warlock, and the St. Paul Suite of Gustav Holst, which is reviewed next in this column.

One could add to this list but the illustrations will suffice. It may be the way in which English folk tunes sound when played by the members of the string family, as in Vaughan Williams' lovely Greensleeves, or the strength of modal polyphony expressed thus.

In any case, Britten has herein written one of his most honest pieces. The slow movements are affecting and the vigorous rhythmic passages bounce clearly along. The recording and performance leave nothing to be desired.

HOLST: St. Paul Suite. Boyd Neel String Orchestra. London 99. $5.

The same orchestra plays here as in the Britten. It represents a rare achievement in both repertoire and musical polish. The St. Paul Suite represents one of the busy sections of London City, that which gathers at the feet of the great Cathedral.

Holst loves London. His music shouts and bustles much as the street would. It is light, clear, easy to listen to.

Gordon: The Rake's Progress; Royal Opera Orchestra under Lambert. Columbia MX 313. $3.

This is the ballet the Sadlers' Wells Company danced three times here during its recent visit. The music holds up remarkably well without the stage business.

It is clear, rather popular-sounding music with no problems arising out of being contemporary. The performance under Constant Lambert is all you could ask.

PROKOFIEFF: Cinderella. Same orchestra and conductor as the Rake. Columbia MX 312. $3.

These two scores are also combined on a single LP disk, Columbia ML 4229, for $4.85. Good buy if you like ballet-type music.

Cinderella is not my favorite Prokofieff, but it is pleasant and easy to listen to. I find it witty—others have called it dull. It seems to depend on the dancing more than the Rake's Progress score. Could that be because I have not seen the Cinderella danced while I have seen the Rake three times? If so, it is subconscious on my part, but quite possible.

Again the recording and performance are good. P. H.

Fine Mint U. S. Stamps Command Good Prices

By William M. Stuart

OF EVER increasing interest is the cost of United States stamps. Prices for rare and fine specimens at auction sales during the past year were most unusual. For instance, the 5-cent 1847 first issue. At one sale a horizontal pair on cover brought $50, another horizontal pair on cover, used, sold for $56 and a single copy, very fine, used, sold for $22.50. A four-marginal copy, 10-cent, 1847, with light cancelation, went for $67.50, and a fine copy of the same, with blue cancelation, sold for $65. A copy of 90-cent, 1869, unused, brought $55. The 1893 Columbian issue brought good prices also. An unused block of four, $1, sold for $76; block of four, $2, unused, $110; single, $2, unused, sold for $33, and $4 and $5 values, unused, brought $70 each. A fine copy of the $1 denomination, 1898, Omaha, imprint unused pair with plate number, sold for $62.50. In another auction a block of four, 1906, Lincoln, imperf, sold for $177.50. Another block of four, mint, 10-cent, Panama-Pacific, perf. 10, sold for $160.

STUART

These figures indicate very clearly that fine mint United States stamps of practically any issue command good prices at auction sales.

AIRMAIL service will be inaugurated on February 1 at New Haven, Conn., on Route A M-5. No official cachet will be authorized, as a cachet was honored some time ago at this point.

Y.; Zanesfield, Ohio; Brookings, Eagle Point, Fossil, Moro and Prineville, Oreg.; Piney Flat, Tenn.; East Burke, Vt.; Medina, Wash., Chesapeake and Durbin, W. Va.

Austria has issued another stamp in the series of famous citizens, a 1 sch value honoring the composer, Karl Milloecker. The stamp became valid for postage on December 31, the fiftieth anniversary of the composer's death. The stamp was recess-printed by the Austrian State Printing Works and is without surtax.

A DONATION auction was held at the Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., Tuesday evening and a goodly sum was realized for the club treasury. Ellery Denison was auctioneer. On January 17 a $2 auction will be held. The club meets at Pythian Temple, 1012 9th st. nw., at 8 p. m.

Don Cossacks Here; Stern Program Set

LOOK what's coming to town this week: composers, composer-pianists, Cossacks, and Horowitz, too!

HOUGHTON

Tuesday night Horowitz gives his third performance of Samuel Barber's new piano sonata. He will play it in New York's Carnegie Hall later in the month. It should be one of the important pieces of the year—if we're lucky, it may be far more than that.

Wednesday night the National Symphony has Isaac Stern for violinist, and a suite by Baltimore's composer, Eric Weisgall, who will do his own conducting.

Thursday brings the Boston Symphony back for their second appearance of the year. Their guest will be no less than Francis Poulenc, noted French composer, who will play his own new concerto with the orchestra under Munch.

RICHARD BALES opens his new year with an all-Mozart program this evening at the National Gallery with Marjorie Mitchell playing one of the greatest of all piano concertos, the D Minor.

Louia Vaughn Jones plays the violin Tuesday at 8 p. m. at Asbury Methodist Church. His program will include one of his own transcriptions. Warner Lawson will accompany Jones at the piano.

The Rev. James R. Houghton leads the Boston University Seminary Singers today at 11 a. m. in Eldbrooke Methodist Church.

Funds Drive For Orchestra Starting Anew

Its ranks provide music for the school children of the District of Columbia as the central fact of a newly invigorated program of music in the schools. It is heard on the air regularly in neighborhood concerts open to the public without charge.

Its ranks provide music for American University's chamber music series, for Catholic University's choral evenings. It gives a program a year in that institution. It is heard in concerts throughout this part of the country.

Summer Concerts

IN THE summer Washington is kept from musical starvation by the dozen concerts played by the orchestra at the Watergate. It is inconceivable that any adequate observance of Washington's Freedom Fair coming up in a few months, will not find the National Symphony playing an important part in the musical end of that celebration.

And the National Symphony Orchestra is headed by a young American conductor of undoubted gifts whose work with the orchestra in less than one year has changed its character and discipline in marked ways, all to the good.

It is silly to prattle idly about the genius of Toscanini, Beecham, Monteux, Koussevitsky, and Bruno Walter, to name only five of the greatest living conductors. But these men are in their seventies and their eighties. Not one of them—no single one, was hailed in his thirties or even his forties, as the unequivocal genius that each is now considered in some quarters.

Two High Qualities

WASHINGTON has had the good sense and fortune to give its orchestra into the hands of a man who shows at each concert that he understands music and what makes it go. Those two qualities have often led him to performances of enkindled fire.

Unless one chatters loose-wittedly about "great personalities" and "immortal fires" one knows that great musicians are forged in the open hearths of public performance, preceded by adequate rehearsals.

To talk with Sir Thomas Beecham and George Szell during their visits to Washington this season is to hear opinions of delight in the playing and technique of the National Symphony under its present conductor.

Future of Music

THE future of the orchestra can only be said to be at stake in the present financial drive in a limited sense. True—the money is necessary for another season of concerts.

But it is the future of music in Washington that is the main issue today—the orchestra must be kept going.

MUSIC HAS a way of becoming associated with events in our lives; and in the years to come, many a person will think back to the events of the past year, 1949, upon hearing one of the song hits of the year.

A year ago, at the start of the New Year, everybody was humming a catchy little western song, "Buttons and Bows"; and the young lady who started it on the road to success, Dinah Shore, was enjoying quite a popularity spree. The big hits of 1949 lay in the future, however. And to give you a reminder of some of the fine songs of the past year, as the theater programs say, in the order of their appearance, here is "A Musical Almanac," 1949:

JANUARY: "On a Slow Boat to China," as recorded by Kay Kyser, began the year's parade of hits in a pleasantly harmless fashion. With a glance at the headlines, a lot of people were saying that anyone who took a slow boat to China would probably take a fast boat right back again.

FEBRUARY: This was the month when one of the big hits of the year attained popularity. The song, "A Little Bird Told Me," brought a hand-clapping gospel meeting spirit to popular music; and the lucky lady whose record was responsible for the whole thing, Evelyn Knight, hit her highest peak since leaving our own King Cole Room to make her way in the outside world.

MARCH: "Cruising Down the River" was the song on everyone's lips. The tune, written by two elderly English spinsters, had all of America swaying to its rollicking waltz rhythm a scant two weeks after Blue Barron's record started it on the road to fame.

APRIL: The trend toward old-fashioned waltzes continued with a tune which would have delighted the little German bands of yesteryear with its spirit of "Ach, du lieber Augustin." This one, you will recall, was titled "Forever and Ever."

MAY: Vaughn Monroe, who brought great favor to "Ballernia" in 1948, soared to a new pinnacle of public esteem with one of the year's important songs, "Riders in the Sky."

JUNE: One of the finest musical shows in the history of our theater, "South Pacific," had brought its enchantment to the current scene, and the song of the month was "Some Enchanted Evening." Many of those who paid for tickets to see the show suggested that the song be re-titled "Some Expensive Evening."

JULY: Gordon Jenkins, one of music's outstanding arranging talents, brought a new sound to popular music with "Again." Jenkins' use of a vocal choir to carry the melody, and also humming along as instruments in the orchestra, was to be widely imitated in just tribute to a tasteful step forward in popular music.

AUGUST: A vogue for hillbilly ballads swept the Nation, and "Room Full of Roses" by Sammy Kaye scored the outstanding success of the lot.

SEPTEMBER: "You're Breaking My Heart" became a hit, and Vic Damone emerged as a star of top proportions with his forthright interpretation of the old Italian melody.

OCTOBER: A work song, "That Lucky Old Sun," was the musical topic of the day, thanks to the sincere delivery of Frankie Laine. While singing for Washingtonians at the Capitol Theater, Frankie woke up one morning to find that his record had made him a national sensation.

NOVEMBER "Mule Train" made its appearance and mothers sent their children to music school to learn to play a whip.

DECEMBER: "Rudolph, the Red Nosed Reindeer" helped to make Christmas a bit merrier than usual for music lovers, and rounded out the hits of 1949 in heartwarming fashion.

Isaac Stern will return for his second engagement with the orchestra. He will play the G Major concerto of Mozart, and Ravel's Tzigane. The latter is a passionate gypsy piece in the manner of an improvisation.

Howard Mitchell will follow the Tzigane with Ravel's Spanish Rhapsody for contrast. After the intermission, Eric Weisgall of the Peabody Conservatory in Baltimore will come forward to direct the local premiere of his own suite for orchestra.

Austrian Art 'Easier' to View

By Jane Watson Crane

Two weeks from today the exhibition of Austrian art treasures will close at the National Gallery. Then will begin the big job of packing, crating and shipping in preparation for the next scheduled engagement at the Metropolitan Museum in New York. Unless one has taken part in assembling and installing an art show, it is almost impossible to realize the labor and detail involved. When items of the size, weight, and variety of those in the Vienna collections are moved, it is a major operation. The Austrian government has its own curators and technicians on hand to look after the material, which will eventually make its way to California.

After New York, the exhibition will be seen by people in Chicago and San Francisco. It is worth remarking that there are art institutions in this country from Coast to Coast with the facilities for displaying and handling an exhibition of this character. Twenty-five years ago it is doubtful whether such an undertaking would have been possible; 50 years ago, it would have been impossible.

The Nation's Capital had first look at the Vienna collections, as it did last year at the paintings from the Kaiser Friedrich Museum in Berlin. In recent weeks a favorite topic of discussion has been comparison between the two.

Lengthy Stay

WHILE there have been crowds at the Vienna show since it opened, there has been less of the hectic atmosphere of stampede which accompanied the German event. The length of the stay is twice as long, for one thing, and while some of the German pictures subsequently went on an extended tour of the country, it was thought originally that the National Gallery would have the only showing. Add to this the fact that it was held during the cherry blossom season, and you have at least a partial reason for the crowds. People who came long distances especially to view the show often found it impossible to get near the things they most wanted to see. At rush hours no one could linger over a favorite; to move with the jostling tide of humanity was the only course. By and large, visitors to the Vienna exhibit have found the going easier and pleasanter.

Titian's "Woman in a Fur," currently on display at the National Gallery in the special exhibition of art treasures loaned by the Austrian government

The German show contained many more paintings and fewer big ones; there were no tapestries, armor, or objets d'art. The basic difference between the two collections is that the Kaiser Friedrich art was assembled by specialists in the twentieth century, whereas the Vienna grew from medieval times.

What made the Berlin show of particular interest to art people here was the inclusion of a number of the early German paintings which are little known in the United States. The Vienna collection carries an aura of magnificence quite aside from its association with the Habsburgs because of the splendor of canvases by Venetian, Flemish, Spanish and Dutch masters. Neither selection could give more than a partial view of the whole. The finest Breughels remain in Vienna, the Holbein portraits and many other paintings were not permitted by the Austrians to cross the Atlantic because of the hazards to panel pictures in the climatic changes on our continent.

Essentially, both German and Austrian exhibitions are similar in character to the painting collections in the major United States museums today. Rubens, Rembrandt, and the Italians of the Renaissance—the same names recur in catalogues here.

THERE was a popular favorite in each exhibition, both much the same in type. The Holbein portrait of the merchant "George Ghisze" and the Vermeer "Artist in his Studio" are monuments to clear and faithful rendering a comfortable bourgeois society, and the artist's infinite capacity for detail. The choices relate more closely to the tastes of the people of this country than to the inclinations of the artists, whose admirations these days run more to Michelangelo, Goya and El Greco.

'Panorama' Takes Itself Very Seriously Indeed

By Sonia Stein

THEY call it "Pot Pan" for short at WTOP, but the station's new "Potomac Panorama" series is very serious in its intent—lively and humorous though it may be in presentation.

It's intended to be a kind of "social history." In form it's an "actuality" broadcast, in which real people portray themselves. Only the narrator who links the show together, is a professional. To be broadcast once a month, the series began the second Sunday in December with a report on Washington postmen, and will be continued this second Sunday in January at 4:30 p. m., when the work of the "time" experts at the Naval Observatory and other likely spots is probed.

Robert Nichols, a CBS Washington correspondent, is writing and editing the series for WTOP. One of the youngest Capital correspondents, Nichols is already an experienced, zealous reporter. Starting as a cub at 18, he progressed to the Washington Bureau of the Herald Tribune when he was only 20. In 1946 he went to the Antarctic with the Byrd expedition, and singlehandedly created the famous furor about "wartime censorship in peacetime" when the Navy refused him permission to report that the United States was making land claims in that territory.

How It Started

WORK in documentary radio dramas in which actors recreate real incidents as nearly as the author can manage it, started Nichols toward the actuality broadcast, which goes still further.

The writer of an actuality broadcast gathers hours of material on a tape recorder, winnows the useless from the pertinent and ties the comments together with a narrator's comments.

(Nichols still works in the documentary field which serves its own special and dramatic purposes, and is currently doing research on the subject of charities for a CBS documentary.)

Nichols hopes to use the actuality technique for spot news stories later.

The private lives of people involved in a strike or in any news event help explain their motives, Nichols feels. "Straight fact-by-fact news reporting isn't doing the job," he says.

Nichols cites "The Blast at Centralia No. 5" by John Bartlow Martin in Harper's, and John Hershey's "Hiroshima" in the New Yorker as magazine examples of this technique of news reporting. John Dos Passos' books in which fictional characters are blended with real biographies, is another literary example, according to Nichols.

Just a Reb

FOR the moment, however, he is concerned with general situations rather than news events in the "Potomac Panorama" series. This gives him room for humor as well as fact in the series. In the postman program, for example, he picked up the comment of a postman who was asked by a woman: "Are you a postman?"

"No, ma'am," he countered, "I'm a Confederate soldier."

Mixed with details of the mechanical routine of getting the mail out, were stories of the housewives who ask the mailmen to open a stuck window, to tote a 10-pound package to the post-office. And stories about youngsters, who fill the mailman's bag with apple cores.

Just as in the recent three-week "Dear Mr. President" series which Nichols also handled, a vivid picture of life along the Potomac is given by juxtaposing the light and heavy sides of life.

Today's program on "time" will have this same mixture of fact and fun, Nichols promises, and future shows on the Fire Department, Washington's social scene and the D. C. traffic problem are also expected to show a light side to their nature.

THINGS are really happening to poor Andy H. Brown. After 25 years of dodging the matrimonial halter he got himself hitched—by an inflection. You may recall that on December 11, finding himself standing before the preacher with Abigail Simpson, Andy accidently gained a bride.

In reply to Kingfish's urgent, "You got to go through with it!" Andy had said, "I do?" The preacher took it for assent, and there the situation stands.

Tonight at 7:30 on WTOP-CBS more will be made known. So far we know that Andy has deserted his unlovely Abigail. CBS has issued announcements of his marriage nonetheless. Abigail has instituted suit for fraud and has landed Andy in jail. The people of America have been subpenaed to attend the trial. A radio "lobbyist" has been running frantically from Congressman to Congressman this week trying to get things done about the near catastrophe.

He got plenty of "statements" which you'll hear on the air from time to time.

How it will end, even the script writers don't know, although 32,000 letters, postcards and telegrams have already poured in giving advice.

Only clue kicking around is that the cast for the prospective television version of the show, which will use colored actors with voices supplied by the original "Amos and Andy" cast, as yet contains no Abigail. Not even a "casting call" for one.

IN a burst of misplaced confidence WOIC asked the local television editors to choose the 10 most interesting questions from a list of 50 question most often asked of doctors. We got so absorbed in the questions—some real dillies among them—we didn't get our homework done. So we'll all be up there Tuesday night at 8, shooting the questions directly to Dr. James A. Gannon, prominent local physician and member of the school board who used to answer similar questions on a WOL radio show.

This is another in the Tuesday night discussion series on WOIC, which changes subjects weekly. It looks as if the medical questions could easily take up another show some time. For every one that makes you really wonder whatever makes people so silly! there's apt to be another one that—put to the test—you aren't too sure about yourself.

ROBERT NICHOLS, CBS newsman, is the mainspring of WTOP's new once-a-month "Potomac Panorama" series which goes into its second session today at 4:30 p. m. It's a "social history" series using humor and statistics in equal proportions to tell the story of Washington hit, and he had "Rio Rita" and "Showboat" to choose between. He picked "Rio Rita" for the opened.

William Had Two Shots At 'Showboat'

To force Ziegfeld's hand, Oscar then took "Showboat" to his Uncle Arthur—Ziegfeld promptly bought the show to keep his rival from getting it, and he put it on right after "Rio Rita." In the wings at that opening, Oscar and son Billy, then 9, stood and watched:

"Twenty years later in those same wings," says Billy, "I watched 'Showboat' again—only this time, I was the stage manager. That assignment meant a lot to me—it was my first job after the war."

During the war, as a chief petty officer on a destroyer in the Pacific, Billy saw the "lead sheet" on "Oh, What a Beautiful Morning" for the first time; his only comment was, by V-mail:

"Only 16 bars? Hmmmm."

A postscript on that story: "The first time I heard that song played with a full orchestra, along with the rest of the score of 'Oklahoma,' I was listening to the Japanese radio . . . and the disk jockey was Tokyo Rose!"

All Encouraged

UNLIKE his father, Oscar has encouraged all three of his children to find a career in show business — Billy, his sister, and his kid brother Jimmy, budding composer in college.

Billy, who has been stage manager for "Mr. Roberts" and is now production manager for "Rat Race," once tried to write the music for one of his father's lyrics:

"He gave me a lyric called 'When I Last Saw Paris' and he said I had three weeks to work out the music—if I flopped, he would give it to Jerome Kern."

And, of course, Kern finally wrote the music, but Oscar adds: "Billy made one important change in my lyrics—he changed the title to, 'The Last Time I Saw Paris' . . . lot easier to sing."

We asked Oscar if the song in "Showboat" called "Bill," was named after his boy:

"No . . . and another thing . . . I didn't even write the words for that song—I always have to explain that P. G. Wodehouse wrote that one."

Little Bites Of Philosophy Please Dave

shows. The words, you'll note, are reasonably earthy; the philosophy is unchanged. Relax, kids. Nothing is worth getting excited about.

Very Quiet

THEY are very quiet musical shows, featuring an instrumental quintet, a couple of singers—Connie Russell, who has one of those sex-starved voices, and Jack Haskell about whom I don't appear to have anything at all in my notes—solos on various instruments and Mr. Garroway, his cool self. He engages more and more in philosophy of the mildest sort, little snippets of news that strike him as funny, and anecdotes about the cast.

Occasionally, there are guests (Henry Morgan has been on a couple of times) and there are a lot of little novelty numbers, not all of which come off. Restful is the word for it, I suppose.

Incidentally the origination of what might be described as the bop attitude stems way back to Bing Crosby, that very relaxed man, but it has traveled so far from its starting point that neither Crosby nor the bop addicts would recognize one another.

Just one other word about Mr. G., his philosophy and his pretensions. His hobby is automobiles. He owns five—a Jaguar, Model T, Lincoln Continental, Swallow and Rolls Royce. The Jaguar is upholstered in natural alligator, the Lincoln in Harris tweed. Mr. Garroway upholstered them himself.

Makers Pare Prices Again On Video Sets

NEW YORK (AP). — With the television set boom still in high gear, manufacturers have started another round of price reductions to keep it rolling.

The juiciest price cuts are on big screen sets, with viewing tubes 16 inches across, which in some cases sell for substantially less than half what you'd have had to pay a year ago.

The price trend reflects a swing by the public away from midget-sized pictures, even at lower prices, and mass production savings on the bigger viewing tubes.

Two of the biggest set makers in the business, Radio Corp. of America and Philco Corp. This week announced 1950 lines with hefty price cuts from 1949 models.

RCA put a tag of $299.95 on its 16-inch table set, a slash of $95 from the price of its 1949 model which in turn already had been cut $100 since its introduction early last January. Philco brought out a 12½-inch table set with 97 square inches of picture for $199.95—or $60 under the comparable 1949 model. Both firms made substantial reductions on other sets including a $30 slash by RCA on a smaller 10-inch model.

Other major manufacturers, among them Admiral and Motorola, have new lines or new models slated for introduction in the next week or two. Several are saving their 1950 offerings for showing at the Chicago Furniture Mart opening January 9. And it's a good bet that most of those that have not already posted price reductions will follow the lead of RCA and Philco.

One explanation for price reductions in the midst of booming sales is that record production of the past few months has enabled manufacturers to make economies they can pass along to customers. Also, now that the Christmas buying rush is past, they would like to maintain their expanded production lines — now turning out 100,000 sets a week—and avoid another slump such as that of last summer.

And every time television set prices come down, additional income groups are opened up as potential customers.

HOPALONG CASSIDY and friend, darlings of the westerns in theaters and on television, are now raising havoc with the baddies on radio in a new Sunday series on Mutual (WOL, 4 p. m.) which started last week

Work by Five D. C. Artists Is on Exhibit in Youngstown

FIVE artists of Washington, D. C., Samuel Bookatz, Leonard Maurer, Anthony and Edith Qualia, and Eliot O'Hara, have paintings in the jury-selected fifthteenth annual New Year exhibition of the Butler Art Institute in Youngstown, Ohio. The show is one of the regional events which are gaining strength throughout the country. A total of 530 artists of Ohio, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Michigan, Virginia and West Virginia submitted works, as well as those from the District. Top cash prize of $250 went to Raphael Gleitsmann of Akron. Jurors were Homer Saint-Gaudens, director of the Carnegie Institute in Pittsburgh, and the painters John W. Taylor and Nicola Ziroli.

A watercolor entitled "Rooms," by Mrs. Paul Averitt of 4139 N. Henderson rd., Arlington, is currently on display at the Riverside Museum, New York.

Beginning January 15, the Phillips Gallery will show paintings and water colors by Theodoros Stamos, San Francisco painter.

The United Nations Club is having an exhibition of paintings, drawings and prints from Washington collections, opening tomorrow.

William Calfee, head of the art department at American University, has had an exhibition of his paintings at the Leyhe Gallery in New York and the work will subsequently be shown in the members' gallery at the Baltimore Museum of Art. The show has drawn favorable critical comment in Manhattan, where this gifted and versatile artist is best known as a sculptor.

Among new shows in the District and vicinity is an exhibition of paintings by Omar Carrington at Chequire House in Alexandria, beginning tomorrow; paintings by Thomas Benton, Adolf Dehn, Francis Criss, Ernest Fiene, Peter Hurd, Joe Jones, George Schreiber, Frederic Taubes and other American artists for the Standard Oil Co., at Howard University until January 31; recent work by Shirley Lichtman at Ginn's in Silver Spring. Theodora Kane, recently returned from a trip to France, has set up a studio for classes in painting and drawing for adults at the Silver Spring Art Center, 9312 Flower ave. Water colors by Ellsworth Opie will be shown in the District of Columbia Public Library art room until January 31.

Opening this afternoon from 3 to 6 at the Watkins Gallery of American University is an exhibition by the Artists Guild of Washington. The show will continue through January 29. Watkins Gallery is situated on the university campus, Massachusetts and Nebraska aves. nw.

Corregio's "The Rape of Ganymede," also on display with the Austrian art at the National Gallery

TV Program May Feature Mrs. Roosevelt

NEW YORK, Jan. 7.—In prospect for the new year is a combine NBC radio and televison series with Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt.

Title selected is Tea with Mrs. Roosevelt, to which she would invite guests. The time would be Saturday's at 5 p. m., possibly beginning early in February. The combined show will originate from her home in Hyde Park, N. Y., provided television relay facilities can be arranged.

This would be Mrs. Roosevelt's first regular television series. She has appeared on the radio on many occasions, including a number of programs of her own. Her most recent was a daytime discusion series on ABC in which her daughter Anna joined.

Rectangular television tubes instead of round ones is a development for the new sets in 1950. Already one manufacturer (Air King) has announced they will be incorporated in two models, a console and a table.

Engineers say the rectangular tube permits reproductions of the TV image just as it is transmitted without loss of corners as the case with most round tubes. Another advantage is that they can be used in smaller cabinets without reduction in screen size.

RONALD COLMAN, long in search of a radio show, has found one in the new NBC "Halls of Ivy" series about a college president. He and his wife, Benita Hume, are heard Fridays at 8 on WRC in the comedy series

Air Town Meeting To Be Here Tuesday

"America's Town Meeting of the Air" will be broadcast from WMAL in Washington on Tuesday at 9 p. m.

The program will be broadcast from the Department of Interior Auditorium.

Tickets are available in the reception room of station WMAL, 724 14th st. nw.

Note to Congress: Federal Aid to Education a must

By Fred M. Hechinger

CONGRESS is again at work, or at least in session, and among the unfinished items on its agenda is the need for Federal aid to education. Several terms of debate have helped to clarify some aspects of this issue and to confuse others; what has emerged, however, is that aid is urgently needed. Every legislator ought to keep this in mind; every voter-to-be should keep his representatives reminded that national defense, national economy and national welfare begin in every elementary and high school in every State of the Nation.

Last summer responsible portions of the American public and press were shocked and ashamed when members of the Congress made spectacles of themselves in various parts of the world.

These widely publicized incidents of the past congressional tourist season illustrated with unfortunate drama the urgency of Federal aid to education; for they showed that ignorance anywhere within this country hurts the entire Nation. It would be shortsighted to suppose that ignorant legislators commit their follies only when on far-flung junkets; they are as dangerous on the House and Senate floor.

Nor should these men of limited capacity be blamed personally. They are most likely the true representatives of the majority who elect them, and the only hope for the future perfection of a government which can be perfected only by the people must rest in more and better education for all the children everywhere.

Many Questions

WHEN the issue of Federal aid is reopened on the congressional floor (and it should be, without delay!) there will be technical questions to be debated and solved. Since the problem is a grave and historic one, the final law must be made wise, nonpolitical, and void of governmental control or interference in the classroom. It must be a law, too, which will honor the great traditions of American education, locally and nationally.

There no longer remains reasonable doubt that Federal aid is needed—and needed now unless the flood of children, the crammed schools, and firetrap buildings, and the inequality of facilities in different parts of the country are to wipe out the tremendous American progress toward democracy through education.

The mood of current political debate makes it likely that the "menace" of the "welfare state" will be invoked to block Federal aid. But surely the concept that equality of educational opportunity for all children is a symptom of socialism should have died some time ago—roughly in Jefferson's day. Senators Taft (R., Ohio), Lodge (R., Mass.), Aiken (R., Vt.), O'Conor (D., Md.), among many others, have supported Federal aid legislation more than a year ago, and not one of them could by any stretch of imagination and vocabulary be called a disciple of statism or a dupe of Marx.

Minimum Standards

THE objection will be voiced that Federal aid will cause those States most in need of better schools to rely on out-of-State tax money in order to relax their own efforts. That danger is real; but it is one which can be overcome by specific references in the bill, by the setting up of minimum standards of expenditure and similar safeguards. If this will again raise outcries of "interference!" the answer is obviously that the cooperative, democratic prevention of the fraudulent use of tax money is an essential act of popular government.

There is no reason why Federal aid should in any way decrease local and State support of education. The very amount—300 million dollars per year had previously been proposed—indicates, when compared to the vast needs for more and better schools and teachers, that every ounce of effort on every level will be needed to win the battle against ignorance.

Nothing can provide a substitute for grass-roots support and interest, and no sensible advocate of Federal aid thinks that such legislation could or should be a substitute for anything.

But no amount of grass-roots support can overcome the fact that the grass grows more abundantly in one pasture than in another. Effort helps; but climate, soil, geography and background are inescapable factors. To deny this is to deny to some children their birthright of equal opportunity. It is to perpetuate ignorance which will hurt all of us at home and abroad. It is to harm ourselves and democracy everywhere.

At the Bridge Table

Baltimore Line-up Defending N. Virginia Fours Crown

By Marian H. Barre

THE gang's all here—for the first tournament of 1950.

Held under the sponsorship of the Washington Bridge League, the thirteenth annual championships of Northern Virginia close tonight at the Roosevelt Hotel, a Baltimore line-up defending the team-of-four title, last of five events of the program. A. M. Sobel of New York is directing the games, which started last Friday. James G. Stone is tournament chairman.

Among the visiting luminaries attending is the newly elected president of the American Contract Bridge League, R. L. Miles, jr., of Norfolk, Va. This is his first trip here since his election.

During the last week of 1949 not a single master point game was held in this vicinity but with the birth of 1950 the scramble for national awards became continuous and the current week is equally strenuous.

The schedule includes—the Count Club monthly at 8 p. m. Tuesday; "Winners' game," ranking monthly event in the Washington Bridge League, Wednesday 8 p. m., Hotel Roosevelt with a 7:30 section for nonwinners; Euclid Studio Friday monthly at 8 o'clock; the Agriculture Bridge Club match at 1 p. m. Saturday, also at Euclid Studios; the Chess Club, Saturday 8 p. m. at Hotel Gordon.

TWO local clubs have annual championships that go into competition in January; at the Chess Club, David Murray will defend the open pair title with a substitute partner for cochamp J. M. White in a two-session match on the 17th. and 24th. Col. and Mrs. J. G. Seabourne now hold the mixed pair at Arlington Farms Duplicate Club where the annual game begins on January 27, with finals on February 3.

Players who began the new year auspiciously by capturing the first national awards allotted locally were Mrs. Ida Terrant and J. P. Snyder, Mrs. C. W. Zimmer and Everett Van Eck; half-points going to Mrs. Helen St. John—R. C. Witherell, Mark Lingley, D. J. Harris. Held New Year's Day at the F. Arthur Walker Club, the match was directed by Col. Henry A. Walker. Witherell was honor guest at a party afterward which ushered in his birthday on January 2.

Awards in competition at the Federal Bridge League on January 2 were held over from 1949, the December open pair match having been postponed. Mrs. Marianne Boschan, the District's latest Life Master, and James G. Stone won north-south while east-west points went to R. H. Higgins and Hardy Allen. In runner-up spots were Miss Kathleen McNutt—Mrs. Zimmer, Mrs. Howard Campbell—F. M. Lake.

A REVISION of season averages in the Washington Bridge League puts Mrs. James Adler at the top among Class "C" players, Al White is now in second place with .56230 to .56234 for Mrs. Adler.

In the foursome series the team captained by James G. Stone leads at the halfway mark, having won 79½ boards, with the Moore team second with 62 boards. Members of the first line-up are Stone, Boschan, L. G. Tubbs, Colonel Skinner, W. A. Poissant; Mrs. M. L. Fisher, Mrs. Skinner, Mrs. E. P. Cotter, and J. R. Moore, form the other team.

The league's master-point game of January 4 was played in three sections. In "A", Mrs. George Kathan—Mrs. J. G. Fletcher won north-south, George Dickerman—S. M. Cohee in the other position, runners-up being Mrs. Stanley Beasley—Miss Laura Hunter, M. D. Goldstein—Major M. Ciccone, W. A. Poissant—H. Neebe, the latter pairs tied.

Section B awards went to M. Michaels—Richard Freeman, M. Haven-Irving Rottenberg, with half-points to Miss Clara Sternecker—M. Solomon, Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Rosson.

Dr. M. M. Flood, a former Washingtonian, now of Santa Monica, Calif., and Russ Nichols won with a 70 percent game in Section C, where a Howell movement was used, second place going to F. Holtzman and Henry Pike.

A new class for beginners in contract bridge will open at Roosevelt High School, 13th and Upshur sts. nw., on Tuesday at 7:30 p. m.

1950's Class of Graduates To Face Shortage of Jobs

NYHT News Service

A SHRINKAGE in job opportunities confronts the coming crop of college and high school graduates, according to Northwestern University in Chicago.

One hundred thirty-two employers who hired 8321 college men and women in 1949 expect to take only 6270 in 1950, the university's bureau of placement reported following a survey.

Pointing out this 25 percent drop, Frank S. Endicott, director of the placement bureau, said business and educational leaders are urging that students be acquainted with the fact that here are not enough high-salaried and executive positions to go around, and that they must be prepared to accept jobs in lower classifications, at least to start.

All Executives

PERSONNEL officers say their operation is made more difficult by the fact that "too many college graduates are looking for executive positions," which now are filled because most postwar expansion programs have been completed.

In connection with its survey of job openings, Northwestern also queried college presidents, deans and faculty members in 22 States. One college president said, "Business and industry should make a greater effort to place those graduates with low ability in routine jobs and provide training for those of high ability so that they can progress rapidly."

Most of the educators polled suggested that industry use more and improved employe training programs to provide for the advancement of workers who do not receive the benefit of college instruction. Colleges and universities must "more realistically" guide students as to job opportunities, it was said.

High Standards

IN AN EFFORT to absorb the growing surplus of graduates, it was recommended that industry make longer-range plans and inform schools of anticipated needs well in advance of graduation time.

Another partial solution, many industrial and educational representatives agreed, is for colleges to become more selective in administration policies and insist on high standards of student work.

5 New Hotels are Open in Miami Beach

MIAMI BEACH, Fla.—Five new hotels are open for the first time this season, in addition to dozens of new apartment buildings. These will give Miami Beach a record number of visitor accommodations including 25,000 hotel rooms and 15,000 apartment units.

In view of this increase, several hotels have announced their rates will be down slightly from last season, although most of the ocean-front luxury hostelries are meeting competition by increased services to guests and enlarged facilities for swimming and other recreation.

Vacationers who were at Miami Beach last winter will find the city, too, has enlarged and bettered its park areas. Northshore park, with tennis courts and other playground facilities, now is open to the public. In Lummus park, along Ocean drive between 5th and 15th sts., a new promenade has been added and colored lights will illuminate the palm trees at night.

Approximately two of the eight miles of beachfront within the city limits are reserved for public use in the municipal park system. Hotels, private cabana clubs and residences maintain the other beach areas.

Except Three

Miami Beach, Fla.—This city's average visitor population in February is larger than that of the permanent population of every city in Florida except three. It is estimated Miami Beach's 361 hotels and 1400 apartment buildings accommodate more than 75,000 persons at midseason.

How About Williamsburg-Yorktown?

By Walter W. Hubbard
American Automobile Association

WINTER, spring, summer or autumn—all are appropriate for a visit to the tri-city combination of Jamestown, Yorktown and Williamsburg, in the Old Dominion State. The trip outlined herewith involves approximately 330 miles of over-the-road travel, but this time of the year neither ice nor snow bothers U. S. 1, 17 or 301, which are largely used for the journey.

Our pleasure trip starts with the southbound run over U. S. 1 to Alexandria, historic city on the Potomac, just beyond which lies Gunston Hall, home of George Mason, author of the Virginia Bill of Rights. During 1950 this $300,000 estate, now the property of Virginia, will be open to the public regularly, its official opening to take place during Garden Week in Virginia, April 22 to 29.

Accontink is 10 miles from Alexandria, and 15 miles northeast of Dumfries, which we enter next. Here is a village, settled in 1707 by Scotch businessmen, which later became a great tobacco shipping center on the Potomac.

Curtain Raiser

TWELVE miles further south lies Stafford, and another 9 miles brings us into Fredericksburg, always a good curtain raiser for any visit to Yorktown or Jamestown. Eighteen more miles and we are in Bowling Green, established in 1794 and containing an impressive monument commemorating the persecution of the Baptists. Traveling over U. S. 301 for 15 miles we reach Dawn, where we make a left-hand turn and take State highway 30 for the 24-mile run to King William.

Seventeen miles southeast we find West Point—no relation to the "Black Knights of the Husdon," for it is located at the confluence of the Mattaponi and Pamunkey Rivers. It was formerly the site of Pamunkey, Powhatan's capital. Crossing the York River, we head South over State 30 for Toano, a distance of 14 miles.

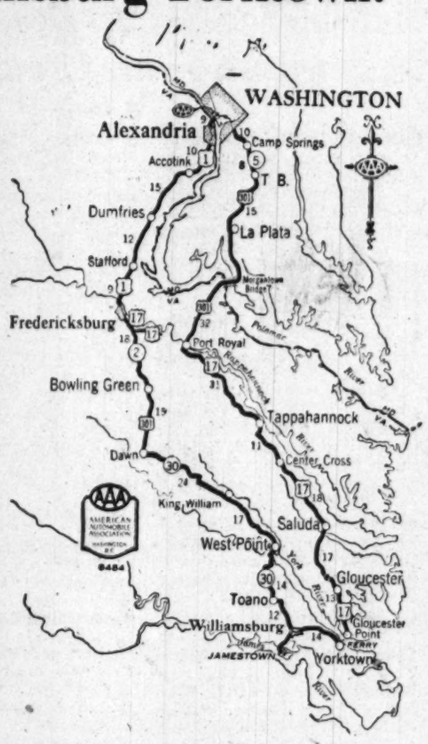
Fees Charged

TWELVE miles south by motor car and we are in historic Williamsburg. Either the Inn or the Lodge, or a nearby cabin, will be an ideal place for your overnight stop.

The Palace of the Governors, the Capitol—over which flies an obsolete Union Jack, Raleigh Tavern and the Public gaol are especially worth visiting, but there is an entrance fee to all of these places. While I think it is a "must" for tourists from the Greater National Capital area, it is only fair to warn parents of a couple of teen-age youngsters that when their family of four visits Williamsburg and expects to visit seven of the buildings, on a combination ticket, they will pay $12 in all, including tax. A family of five, including three children 12 years of age or older, desiring to visit only five of the exhibit buildings, would also pay $12.

In Bruton Parish Church hangs Williamsburg's "Liberty Bell." so called because it rang out the announcement of the Declaration of Independence. It is worthy of a visit before we drive the 7 miles, over a fine, improved boulevard to Jamestown, first white settlement in what is now the United States.

Here it was that Pocahontas, attractive daughter of Powhatan, met and fell in love with Capt. John Smith but was induced to marry another John—Rolfe, by name—and go to England where, in 1617, she died. She had one son, Thomas, whose descendants became prosperous Virginia planters.



Surrender Scene

RETURNING to Williamsburg from Jamestown, we drive 14 miles to Yorktown, where Lord Cornwallis, pleading illness, delegated General O'Hara, his "fighting Irishman" who had taken a licking, to receive the surrender terms and turn over Cornwallis' sword to General Washington's representative.

Take your camera with you when you go over the battlefield, as some of the age-old French and American guns are still to be seen there behind earthen walls. In leaving, we make use of the ferry to Gloucester Point across the York River.

From here we make use of U. S. 17 to Gloucester, where, between mid-March and April 15, there are hundreds of acres of colorful daffodills in bloom. The courthuse here was built in 1766 and is in a good state of preservation. Seventeen miles to the north lies Saluda, and 18 miles still farther brings us to Center Cross, on the Rappahannock River, 11 miles south of Tappahannock, established in 1680 and originally known as Hobbs' His Hole.

Continuing over U. S. 17 we drive 31 miles northwest to Port Royal, where we make a right-hand turn into U. S. 301 and head for the Potomac River Bridge, erroneously but better known as the Morgantown Toll Bridge, not far from Wayside, Md. Thirty-two miles of motoring are consumed between Port Royal and La Plata, Md., and another 15 in traveling to T. B.

At this oddly named town—T. B.—we switch to State 5 and drive 8 miles to Camp Springs, and then another 10 miles into the District of Columbia. The A. A. A. advises at the very least three full days, with early starts, for this Williamsburg trip.

Aid for Tourists

West Europe Agrees on Travel Rules

NYHT News Service

PARIS.—The Western European countries have eased life for the tourist by agreeing on a set of standard rules in place of the conflicting regulations that have complicated the crossing of international boundaries.

From now on, 18 countries will allow tourists from the United States and other "distant overseas countries" to pass through their territories with up to 400 worth of travel souvenirs, including half a litre (about a pint) of perfume, at least 400 duty-free cigarettes, and two opened bottles of wines or spirits.

In addition, the overseas tourists will have to pay no duty on new clothing or other personal possessions. For cyclists, special permits for bicycles no longer will be required, and no duty will be charged.

The quotas agreed upon by the countries represent a standard minimum and do not mean a reduction in more liberal provisions already granted by some States—for example, the permission for the tourist to import 1000 cigarettes into France. However, many countries have fallen below the new levels until now, and they will raise the quotas in line with the agreement.

Balmoral Club Starts Series of Dances

The Balmoral Club, Nassau, Bahamas, has inaugurated a series of formal dances, with Lou Adams and his orchestra. Dances later will be scheduled for Tuesdays and Saturdays and during the height of the winter season for Thursdays also. Dress on Saturday evenings will be formal.

Have a Limequat?

Interesting and little-known tropical fruit grown in the Miami Beach area include the sapodilla, monstera deliciosa, egg fruit, soursop, Meyer lemon and sapote. Numerous little-known citrus crosses also are grown, such as the limequat, a cross between a lime and a kumquat.

Phoenix Museum Open for Winter

Phoenix, Ariz.—The Heard Museum, containing some of the most treasured artifacts o. Southwest Indian culture in the country, has opened here for its twenty-first winter season.

The museum originally housed a collection of artifacts from the famed Casa Grande ruins, near here. During the past 20 years, however, many collectors' items have been added and the number of exhibits has grown until today it is one of the most complete anywhere.

Chief point of interest for the more than 10,000 people who visited the museum last year was the basket collection. More than 35 Indian tribes from Mexico to Point Barrow, Alaska, are represented by the 500 baskets on display.

Authorities on archaeology, geology, Southwest Indian lore and travel will again appear at the museum this year as part of its regular program. The museum is open to the public, free of charge.

How Thrifty Scots Evaded Road Tolls

On NC 501 in the Sandhills of North Carolina, near Cameron, you will intersect the site o. the old Salem to Fayetteville plank road. Thrifty Scots had settled the country and they very quickly built a series of fine detours around the toll houses, which were erected every 10 miles. The detours were better than the road.

The road was narrow, and rules of the pike gave loaded wagons right of way over unloaded ones. If two loaded wagons met on a hill, the one going up hill got right of way.

Tropical Flora, Fauna in Miami

Visitors to Miami can see most of the plants, animals and birds of tropical regions throughout the world and more conveniently than they could if they were to tour the countries to which they are native.

Many thousands of trees, shrubs and vines, some almost unknown even to professional horticulturists, garnered from these regions, can be seen without cost at Fairchild Tropical Garden and the U. S. Plant Introduction Garden and animals and birds at the various zoos and sanctuaries in the area and a circus which has established winter headquarters in the Miami area.

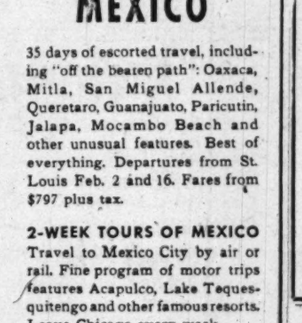
Solution to Last Week's Puzzle



Whistle Stopping

A Thought for the New Year

By Orval Hopkins

I'VE been wrecking my brain, as Benny Greenspan would put it, to say something about travel—something pertinent, but brief; something with which to sort of round out one half century and plunge unseeing into the next.

But it's no use. Fifty years ago people traveled principally on the railroad and by means of the horse. Today they travel by railroad, airplane and automobile, an donly a handful, like jockeys and gentlemen, get about by horse. This is such a thundering metamorphosis that I'm sure anything I could say would be but verbiage. I'll simply pass, and let you contemplate this wonder unencumbered.

FROM QUEBEC'S publicity bureau comes a sad communication in the form of a "snowcast." It has cubicles on it with spaces for "total snow depth," "date and depth of last snowfall," "snow conditions," "slopes," etc. Under "snow conditions" is the sorrowful legend: "Has been raining for the past 12 hours, no snow remaining. Weather forecast: rain, 45 above."

This was dated December 21, however, and I'm sure there are now mountains of snow in La Belle Quebec.

THE PICTURE at right is a representation of the Roney Plaza Hotel in Miami Beach. It is owned by J. Myer Schine, who says the outlook for domestic travel is exceedingly good and that the 75-mile section of Florida coast which includes Miami Beach and Boca Raton is "one of the only areas in the world" offering all-year bathing.

THE UNIVERSITY OF OKLAHOMA football team is just back from a three-day trip to Havana via Braniff International Airways. The Sooners, with their wives and coaches and the coaches' wives, flew to Cuba the day after they shellacked Louisiana State in the Sugar Bowl.

THE VALLEY LODGE Skating Rink has just opened at Waitsfield, Vt., rounding out the winter resort facilities of the Mad River Glen area. Clarence Tucker is owner and operator. Fee is two bits per skater . . . The French Line, in case you missed last Sunday's paper, has reopened an office here at 734 15th st. nw. Bernard Thomas is general agent . . . Canadian Pacific Air Lines and Trans-Canada Air Lines have established a joint round-trip excursion fare of $1348.70 from Cleveland or New York to Tokyo, via Vancouver.

THE FIRST through, one-plane service between New York and the island Antigua in the British West Indies has been opened by Pan American World Airways. St. Johns, the capital of Antigua, was made a weekly flag stop on the line's New York-Buenos Aires tourist service . . . Fort Lauderdale, Fla., which says it has 100,000 winter guests knocking at its door, further asserts that "this season' crop of winter visitors will be delighted to find their dollars going further in the dining room, the cocktail bars, and on rental bills. Vacation expenses have nosedived to the level where even the middle-income group can afford the resort luxuries hitherto only in the reach of the high brackets." This is fine, only what are the people in the higher brackets going to do for luxuries now?

STARTING TODAY, Sunday snow trains from New York to the Berkshires will be scheduled by the New Haven Railroad. Roundtrip fare is $3.45

A hotel in Miami Beach, Fla.

. . . American Express reports as follows: "Southern winter resort attendance gives promise of equaling last season. Winter holiday attendance in Florida after January 15 and through March 15 promises to exceed last season. Train berths to Southern resorts will be difficult to obtain during January . . . American travel to Europe will vie with 1930, its biggest year . . . More cruises are scheduled to touch Mediterranean ports in early spring than ever before. From New York, five transatlantic steamship lines are adding extra ships to their schedules for Holy Year. Many people will be unable to secure passage unless trips are planned before and after the peak season."

AN OUTFIT called Travel & Study, Inc., is sponsoring a series of air excursions to Europe. Leaving January 20, one trip goes to France and England, another to France and Italy, a third to Denmark, Sweden and Norway. The price—which includes transportation, meals, lodgings, tickets for concerts, operas, ballets, theaters and university tuition fees—ranges from $500 to $650.

NOT ONLY that. American Airlines says it is offering teachers an opportunity to travel free to Mexico as tour leaders this school year and next summer. If you're interested in this deal, please communicate with American Airlines. Several painstaking perusals of the data sheet here yields me no more information on the matter and leaves me sadly perplexed.

Winter Travel Now Real Buyers' Market

By Joseph S. Rosapepe

NEW YORK, (AP).—Competition is providing winter vacationists more resorts to choose from this year—at lower prices—both at home and abroad.

Besides that, similar rivalry among airlines, railroads and shipping lines offers the traveler improved services, and, in most cases, much lower rates than in past seasons.

Florida and the Southwest are competing for the business of winter vacationists seeking mild climates. At the same time in the North, New York State winter resorts are vying with those of New England for a larger share of the Nation's four million ski enthusiasts.

In the Caribbean, dollar areas such as Cuba, Puerto Rico and Haiti are building new hotels and other tourist attractions to offset the lure of the British West Indies' Nassau and Bermuda. In those sterling territories costs are down nearly a third in terms of dollars since the devaluation of the British pound.

The buyers' market in winter travel is further stimulated by the increase in cruises to Central America, the Mediterranean and the Hawiian Islands. Besides the regular year-round schedules, many lines have arranged cruises by some of the biggest and best transocean liners to boost the winter trade.

Still another element of competition comes from the efforts of the European Travel Commission, which is promoting group jaunts out of season when costs are down.

And the Irish, French, British and Portuguese tourist offices are urging Holy Year pilgrims to Rome to route trips through their countries.

With all of those places making a special bid for visitors, the winter travel business has turned into a real buyers' market for the first time since the war.

Florida hotels in many cases are listing rates 15 percent below last winter's. Before December 15—official start of the Southern season — accommodations could be had at 25 to 50 percent under last year's rates.

In Miami alone, five million dollars spent on new buildings and redecoration has brought the total number of hotels to 360 with a total of 25,000 rooms. This is in addition to 1400 apartment hotels with 15,000 living units.

Lima Fair to Go Until April 15

The Lima Fair will continue until April 15, 1950, instead of closing on January 1, as had been previously announced, according to information received by Panagra (Pan American-Grace Airways) from the Corporacion Nacinoal de Turismo in Peru.

Extension of the fair for another three months was necessitated because of the increasing number of tourists arriving in Peru from all parts of the hemisphere and the great number of spectacles being shown at the fair grounds.

Originally a part of traditional round of festivities and sports events during the month of October, the Lima Fair this year will last for six months.

Sun Valley Open Again

SUN VALLEY, Idaho. — This mountain sports village again is open for the winter season with more facilities than it ever had in its 12-year history. A key addition is a roomy snack and warming house to be located on the pinnacle of Mount Baldy, highest skiing mountain near Sun Valley itself.

This house is being erected as an extra luxury and convenience for guests, both for skiers on the top of the mountain and for nonskiing sightseers who ride the 11,005-foot Baldy lift in order to take in the panorama of mountain peaks seen from Baldy's summit.

A week's stay can easily be managed at Sun Valley for $100 any time, and during "Learn to Ski" week programs here during January and much of March and April, the rate is $75, including lodging, meals, ski instruction, swimming in the warm-water outdoor pools, and many extras.

It is also possible to have a $44 a day suite with private sundeck at the lodge.

At Challenger Inn village rates begin at $6 a day. There is an entire neighborhood of husky, Swiss-style chalets. Here comfortable bunks are available for as little as $2.

Jackson Hole Naming

The robust fur trappers who were among the first white men to visit Wyoming's Jackson Hole, now a national monument, are responsible for the valley's misleading and uncomplimentary title, notes the National Geographic Society. They spoke of the scenic valley as a "hole" because of the surrounding mountains, and called the spot after one of the most famous of their adventurous calling, David E. Jackson, who trapped there in the 1820's.

British Train Holds Nonstop Record

The "Flying Scotsman," British express train whose schedule allows for no stops on its 392-mile run between London and Edinburgh, still holds the record for the world's longest regularly scheduled nonstop service. According to Thos. Cook & Son's London office, this train has just carried record numbers of foreign visitors to the Edinburgh Festival of Music and Drama, being the fastest link between the capitals of England and Scotland.

Britain still holds other records despite the development of long-distance railroads in other parts of the world.

ARCTIC FOX SKIN WILL PAY FOR FOOD

Oakoak son of Angulalik, who owns the Perry River Trading Post in the Canadian Arctic, inspects customer's pelt. To Eskimos, fur is cash.

CUSTOMER and photographer's sled driver look over Oakoak's goods. Store is unheated because of high cost of coal.

General Store in th

A corner store in the Far North is a frigid place where money is as rare as heat waves . . .

By EDWARD J. NICKEL

IMAGINE, IF YOU CAN, a general store where rice sells for $1 a pound, a ton of coal costs $240, and the price of flour is $24 per hundred pounds; where the storekeeper bundles in furs, and a layer of ice coats the ceiling.

To a weathered Eskimo trader, who bears the jaw-breaking name of Angulalik, such prices are normal. The furs are necessary, and the ice is to be expected. He owns the store, you see.

Arctic Metropolis

It was a chilly 50 below zero in the wind when photographer Dick Harrington recently dog-sledded into the shelter of Angulalik's Perry River Trading Post. The Post, a tiny cluster of buildings, stands on Flagstaff Island, some 100 miles north of the Arctic Circle in one of the most inaccessible regions of the Canadian North. Angulalik was away, attending to business at a branch store he operates at Sherman Bay, 75 miles east. His son Oakoak was behind the counter, waiting on a customer.

For Harrington, who was on the next-to-last lap of a 1,300-mile trek by dog sled, the presence of the customer was a stroke of luck. Angulalik's customers number only about 50, and some of them live 200 miles away, drop in at the post only once a year.

The customer, Ohokak, accompanied by his wife, Kihoak, and his two-year-old son, Atkot, had been at the post for several days. True to custom, they had built their own temporary igloo just outside of the store. When Harrington walked in, they were haggling with Oakoak over the value of 12 Arctic fox skins he had brought to trade.

An elaborate establishment for that part of the Arctic, the huddle of frame buildings once belonged to the Hudson's Bay Company, from which Angulalik bought them after a prosperous year at his traps. Two bare antenna poles stand as reminders of the days when white men lived there; the radio went with them. In the house, a gas-powered generator powers an electric bulb which is shifted from kitchen to living room. Beds and chairs have vanished; everyone sits and sleeps on the floors.

"The store," wrote photographer Harrington in his journal, "is fairly well stocked: dry goods, food staples, even a few cartons of chocolate bars (two for 25¢). Nimble Oakoak slides over the counter to serve. No bookkeeping or counter slips.

Nipples, Pants and Razors

"Other items are snow anchors, two outboard motors. The rafters have nails that hold tinware. There are piles of caribou skins, fishing nets, a few rifles, two pairs of boxing gloves, baby bottles, nipples, biscuits, rope, twine.

"You buy in either bags or tins, or just carry your new pants under your arm.

"There are lanterns, razors, tobacco in tins and four records for a gramaphone. Store is unheated, and we tramp up and down, our breath all around us."

Money as such never passes over Angulalik's counter. Customers trade furs for merchandise. The trader, in turn, takes the pelts to the Hudson's Bay Company post at Cambridge Bay, 150 miles northwest, and swaps them for new stock for his store.

Because neither Angulalik nor his son understand English, amusing misunderstandings have cropped up in conjunction with their annual order from Cambridge Bay.

Once each summer, just before father and son sail their boat to the HBC post, Oakoak sits down to prepare the list of things they need, which he does by laboriously copying—in meticulous block letters—the titles from cartons and cans on his shelves.

"½ Dozen Cheap Prices"

The results are sometimes startling. Canadian traders at Cambridge Bay have been confronted with demands for such things as "1 case marvelous for dishes, stockings, lingerie and woolens;" or "3 boxes Please handle with care. This side up. Made in Canada;" or "6 the Toronto Pharmacal Co., Toronto and Montreal, Ideal Preparation for chapped hands and face and roughness of the skin."

On one occasion, Oakoak ordered "½ dozen cheap prices." Even veteran HBC traders couldn't figure that one out.

NANCY ANDREWS: She rhymed herself into a job . . .

The Turning Point...

NANCY ANDREWS seemed fated to perform unseen by theater audiences. Confined to night clubs, her husky voice and droll wit became familiar in every fancy bistro from Boston to San Francisco. But she had more talent than Broadway had box offices.

She wrote her own lyrics, accompanied herself on the piano, and had her own unfailing methods for gaining the attention of talkative night-clubbers.

But try as she could, Nancy couldn't get "on stage."

Once she even went so far as to recite her problem on a radio-television program. "How can I get out of night clubs and into a Broadway musical?" she asked wistfully. George S. Kaufman, one of the program counsellors, had no solution and life seemed bleak indeed.

She Turns to Verse

Came a day when Nancy heard that George Abbott's general stage manager was taking applications for auditions. Hundreds of young actresses were deluging him with letters and Nancy decided it would be foolish for her to be letter-writer number 3,729. Then she had an inspiration. She grabbed a pen and wrote her plea directly to George Abbott himself—in verse:

Dear Mr. Abbott:
Make Andrews a habit.
For a bit of danseuse
And a lot of chanteuse.
Nancy's your gal,
So please be a pal.
Deny an audition
And I'll sink to perdition

It wasn't great poetry but it did the trick. Nancy was called for an audition and won a lead in "Touch and Go."

Her success has been spectacular. As a result, she says, her correspondence in the future will all be in verse.

Midwinter fire, starting upstairs, destroyed this house in Talcottville, N. Y., left family of four homeless. U.S. has 400,000 home fires yearly.

Could This Be YOUR HOUSE?

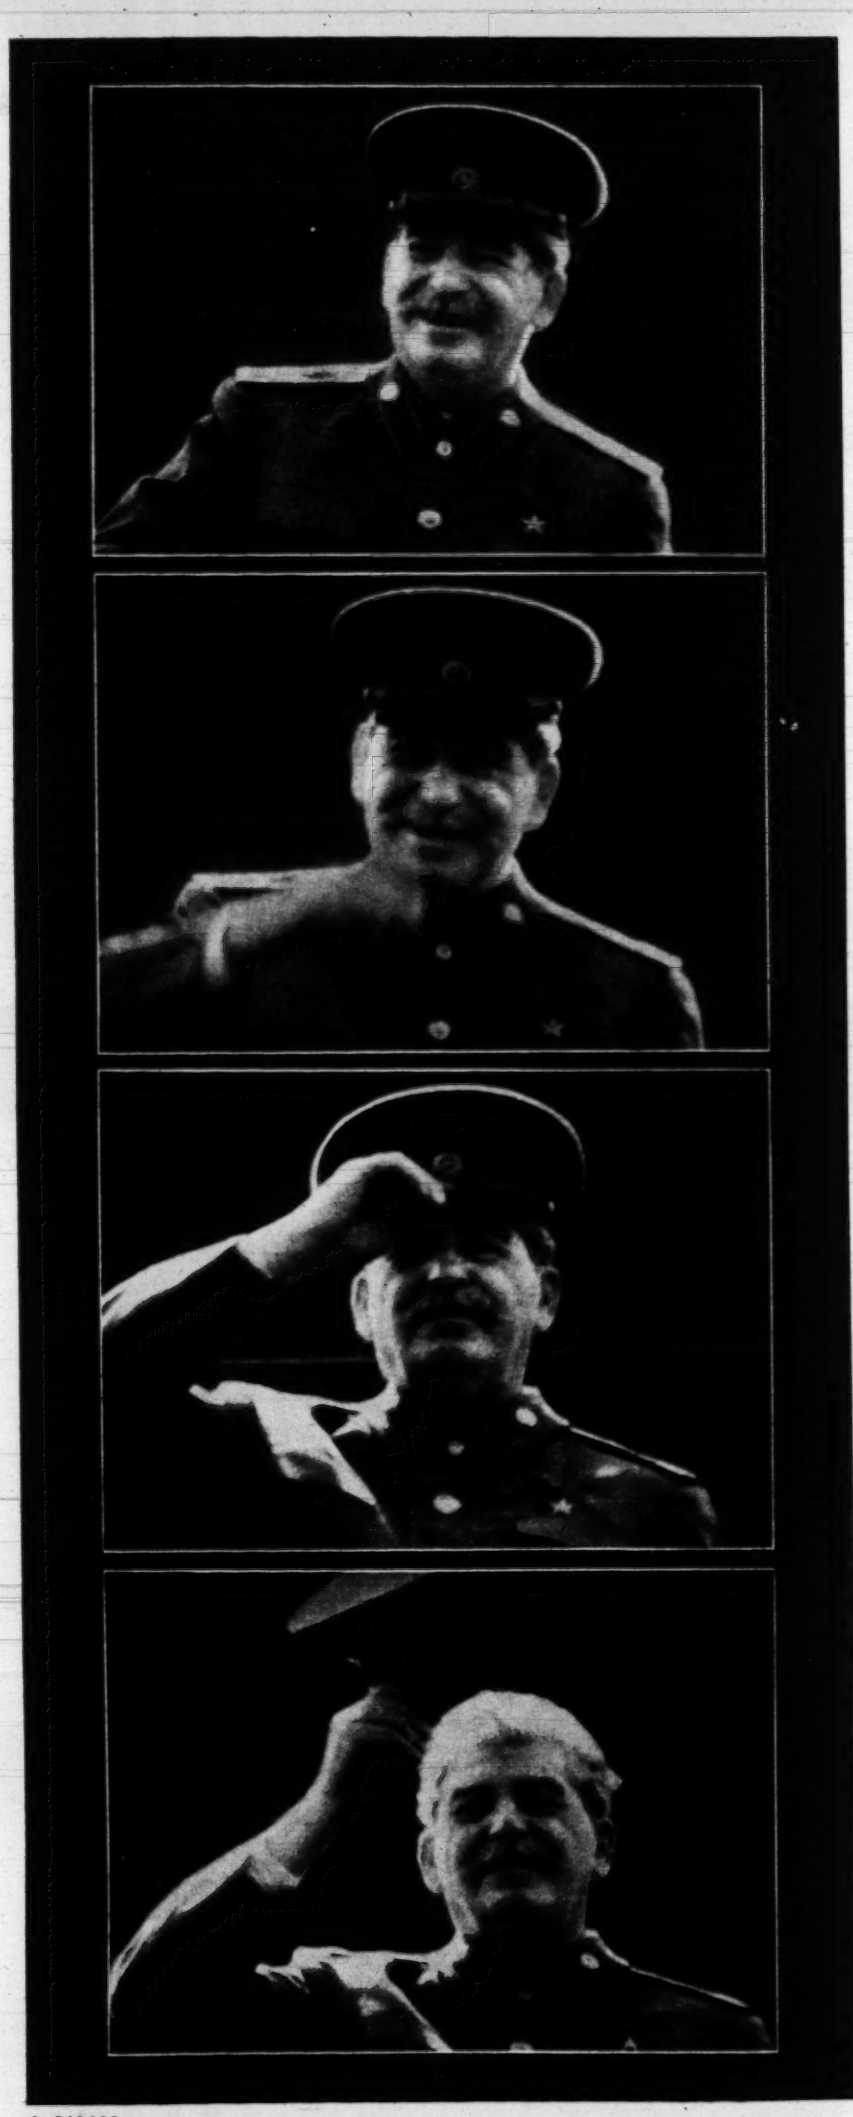
WHAT HAPPENED to the home shown above can happen to yours—but needn't.

Now is the time to be most careful, fire protection authorities say. The dangerous months – January, February, March – lie ahead. It's likely to be cold outside, with stoves and furnaces going full blast. Too often, that can mean over-heated flues, accidentally-ignited trash piles, nasty backfires.

Fire destruction in the U.S. dropped seven percent in 1949, but fires are still costing the country $2 million a day. Of the nation's average of 800,000 fires a year – in which about 11,000 people annually lose their lives –400,000 are fires in dwellings.

Here's how you can safeguard your home, firemen report:

1. Don't overload your furnace.
2. Place portable heaters where they won't be knocked over.
3. Never use kerosene or gasoline to start a fire.
4. Don't overload electrical circuits.
5. Keep a metal screen in front of the fireplace even when you're in the room.
6. If you have a coal or wood stove, set it on a metal pad. Keep grate and ashpit clean.
7. Don't pile rubbish near the furnace where it could ignite accidentally.
8. In banking a fire at night, close bottom drafts, be sure that ports in firing door are open.
9. Put ashes in metal receptacles only. Never use wooden containers.
10. Don't take chances—even with a small blaze. Call your fire department at once.



Stalin's P

Few Russians and no foreigners have seen Josef Stalin at home. Here, for the first time, is an exclusive report

JOSEF STALIN's private life is not much discussed in Moscow. There is no formal ban, but the Generalissimo considers the matter concerns nobody but himself.

The fact that Stalin spends only six months of the year in Moscow and the remainder at Sochi, on the Black Sea, on his doctor's orders has only been hinted at.

Nor does the Russian public know that Stalin, whose second wife died in 1932, has remarried. His present wife is Polina Raskova, 46, a former aviatrix, whose name is sometimes confused abroad with that of Marina Raskova, famous woman flyer killed in 1943. Among Soviet officials, Mme. Raskova is known as Stalin's "morganatic" wife, because she never appears in public with him.

When in Moscow, Stalin actually lives in his villa at Perkhuchkovo, 25 miles north of the capital. This house is on the "Yellow Hill" overlooking a wide fir-clad valley. On another hill—"Bird Hill"—is the dacha (villa) of Marshal Voroshilov.

Stalin gets up very late: rarely before 10:30 a.m. From his bedroom he has direct telephonic contact with Moscow, Leningrad and Kiev.

His private secretary, General Poskrebychev, brings him his mail already sorted. A large part consists of letters from citizens who write Stalin calling attention to defects in the administration, abuse of powers by local authorities, the mistakes of officials. Often, too, they ask his advice on purely personal questions.

One of my intimate friends, a colonel closely connected with Stalin's secretary, was told by the latter that Stalin always insisted on careful study of all letters, no matter where they came from.

Afterwards, they are classified and sent to government officials able to take action on them.

Letters asking for personal advice are sent to a certain Chkiriatov who looks after "Soviet and socialist ethics." Except in rare cases, he replies to these letters.

His Breakfast is American

While going through his mail, Stalin takes his breakfast. At present this is on American lines: toast and butter, ham or bacon, and Russian jam, made from whole fruit.

Generally he drinks strong tea, but sometimes coffee—a half-coffee half-chicory mixture. This is for sentimental reasons, because his mother, whom he adored, loved coffee with chicory and used to give it to him when he was a boy.

In the morning the Generalissimo likes to listen to the radio. He often tunes in to Tiflis, which broadcasts plenty of Georgian music. As he grows older (he was 70 on December 21) he is more drawn toward this music of his childhood, and, indeed, to everything Georgian.

LOOKING BENIGN, Stalin doffs his hat to marchers in Red Square during observances last year. Few Russians ever meet him, fewer know his home-life.

Private Life

By Lt. Col. Kyril D. Kalinov

Actually, Stalin has no ear for music, and only recalls with difficulty tunes he has heard scores of times. He can only hum a few popular Georgian tunes he heard in his youth, and one or two revolutionary songs of the period from 1904 to 1917. He dislikes "longhair" selections.

Towards midday, Stalin leaves for Moscow. Before this, however, there is an invariable ceremony, the visit of one of his physicians, Dr. Kramov. The Politburo sees that Stalin's health is closely watched. It is well known—though never mentioned—that Stalin has "bad blood" in his veins. His father drank, and it is to his excesses, some Russians believe, that the son owes the ankylosis (stiffening) of his left hand, and the fact that two toes of his left foot, the second and the third, are stuck together.

To his bad heredity is also attributed his fear of height, which prevents his traveling by air. From childhood he has always suffered from dizziness. He is under medical care for his heart trouble.

He drives into Moscow by the Mozhaisk Road. Three escort cars precede the Generalissimo's own car. All the cars are identical, black limousines with bullet-proof glass windows. The procession speeds through the city and enters the Kremlin by the Borovitsky Gate.

He Sees Few Callers

In his office, the Premier receives few visitors. Molotov, the Vice Premier; Voroshilov and Beria, chairmen respectively of the Military and Interior Commissions of the Politburo; Dr. Joffe of the Soviet Atomic Commission; and Malenkov, who now occupies Stalin's old post as Secretary of the Communist Party Central Committee, are the only people with regular access to him.

For years Stalin has avoided seeing other ministers, and has left most government business to specialists. He acts only as supervisor, watching from a distance the daily functioning of the State and intervening only rarely.

Towards 2:30 in the afternoon he leaves his office for the main meal of the day in his Kremlin apartment.

Stalin nearly always has a few guests at table, but they are selected from a restricted group: Molotov, Voroshilov, Beria, Mikoyan, Malenkov, Marshal Budyenny. Lazar Kaganovich, of the Politburo, has not been invited since Stalin broke in 1938 with his sister Rosa. She had lived with the Generalissimo, but they parted because she had a tendency to interfere too much in government affairs.

On the other hand Stalin's daughter, Svetlana, is often there, with her husband and their young children. Stalin is very much attached to Svetlana and to his grandchildren.

The meal is simple but hearty. It starts with a few Russian hors-d'oeuvres, washed down with vodka. Then comes a soup—borshch, shchi, rassolnik (salted cucumber soup), or selianka (sturgeon soup). Then a meat dish, often a grilled one such as Caucasian shashlik (broiled lamb), a vegetable, and a fruit tart.

Stalin's favorite wines are Caucasian, Napareuli and Zinondali. He also likes light Italian wines and Burgundy, and has lately developed a taste for Bearnese rosé from France.

After lunch he has his siesta, under doctor's orders. It lasts an hour, and at 6 p.m. he sets off for the country again. Stalin rarely has evening appointments in the Kremlin, except when extremely important negotiations are going forward, such as those about Berlin in 1948.

STALIN often sees four Politburo members at left (Molotov, Beria, Malenkov, Mikoyan), but has dropped Kaganovich (fifth) socially, reports Lt. Col. Kalinov.

There the Generalissimo sometimes gets in a little shooting, or else practices his favorite sport, skittles (ninepins). He has his own skittle-alley, with a metal roof and powerful lighting. He can play at skittles for hours—even sometimes until midnight. Ordinarily, however, he retires with General Poskrebychev into his study at about 9 p.m.

Here he sometimes receives the humbler type of visitors—Stakhanovites, "Heroes of Labor" and so on—in order to "feel the country's pulse," as he puts it. The list of visitors is drawn up in advance by his personal secretary, with the aid of Malenkov. During his winter visits to the Caucasus he sometimes receives visitors in his garden.

Before going to bed, Stalin usually reads. But he also puts in a good deal of time on a work which he believes will be the crown of his writings: a book—his seventeenth—explaining the application of Marxist dogma to the circumstances of our time.

Stalin's favorite reading includes Balzac ("La Comedie Humaine"), Guy de Maupassant, Edgar Allen Poe, Hendrik Ibsen, Pushkin, Gogol, and Saltykov-Shchedrin (the latter a 19th century Russian satirist). He is also fond of adventure tales and detective stories. He has built up a large library of books on espionage.

Among leading Kremlin personalities, a frequent visitor to his home is Mikoyan, whom Stalin uses to guide the Politburo in the "right" direction. He thus avoids committing himself personally and keeps intact his prestige as an infallible arbiter.

Stalin rarely goes to bed before 2 a.m. It is frequently during the night that he uses his direct lines to put questions to or demand explanations from high officials in Leningrad, Moscow, and Kiev.

At two in the morning the lights go out in his office. And the moment the night-light goes on in his bedroom, five searchlights outside light up on the five watchtowers occupied constantly by his personal guard.

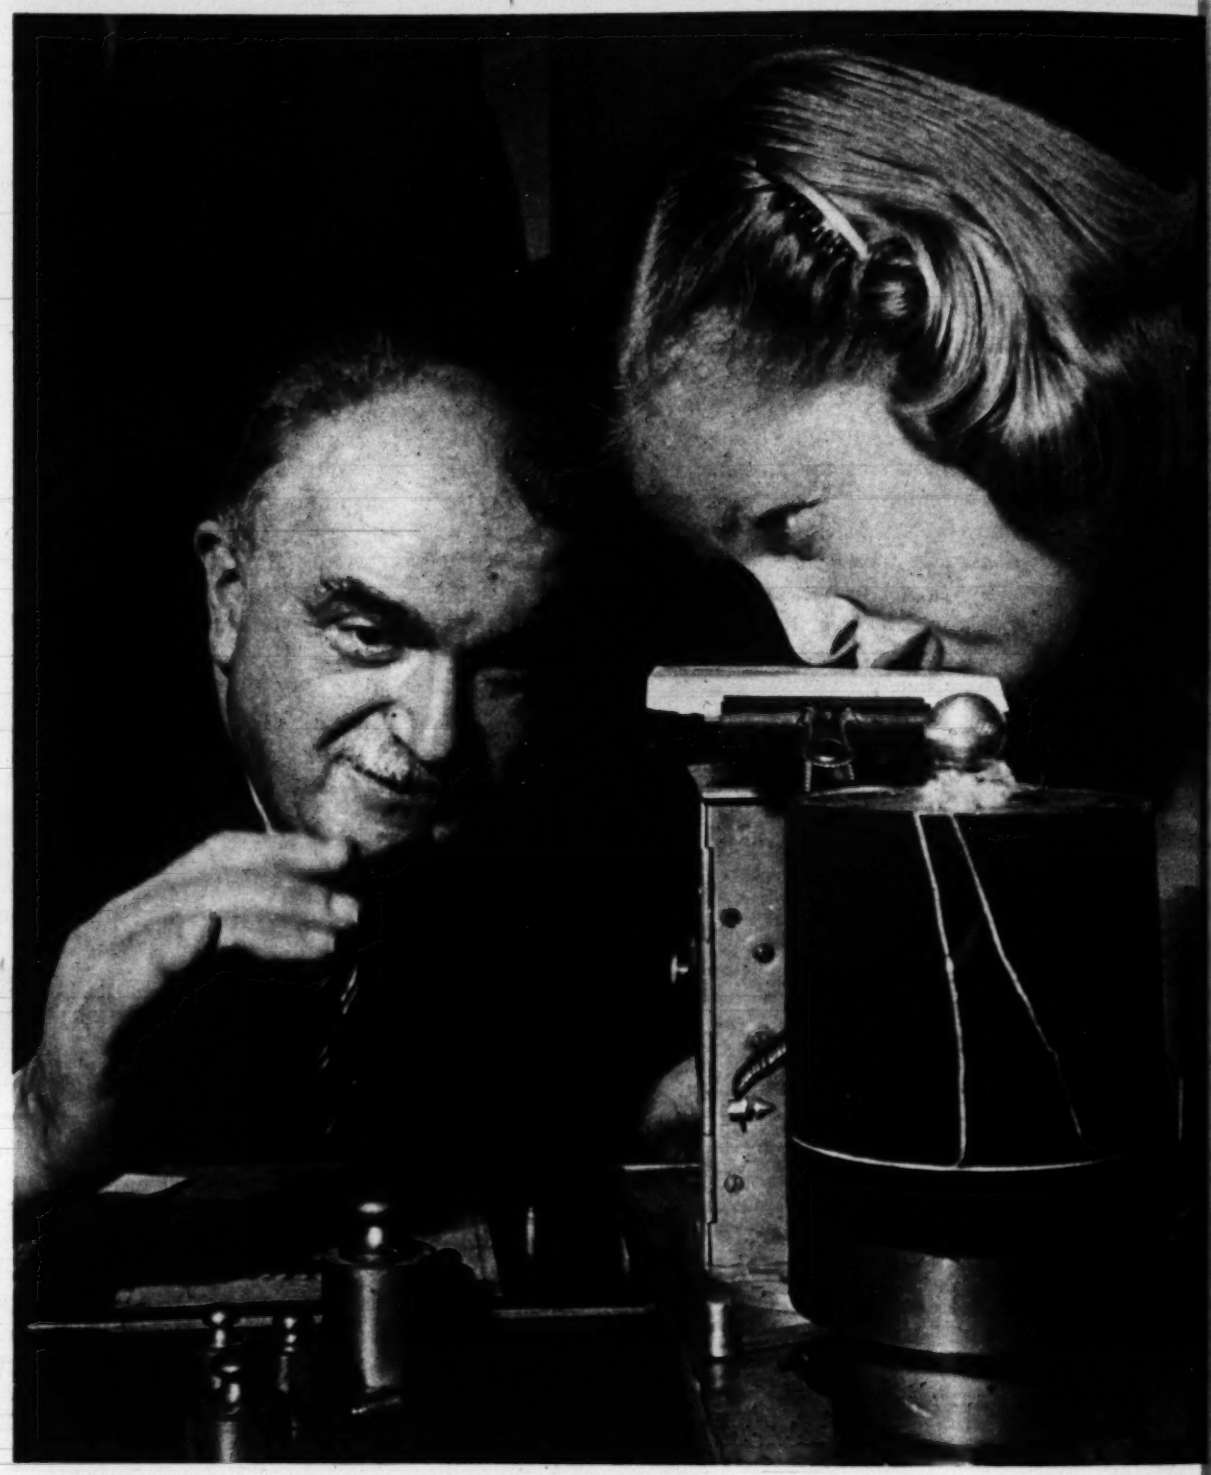
How heavy are your kisses?

BLANCHETTE BRUNOY: BONG!!!

LE KISSOGRAPHE'S inventor, Emile Malespine, supervises test of French actress. After driving indicator off its trolley (right), she settled down, won verdict of "amiable, sensible, quick tempered." Her "comportement" was "of the most perfect simplicity."



A French scientist weighs kisses to analyze personality traits

WEIGHED YOUR KISSES lately? Do you salute your loved one with the pressure of a butterfly's wing, or a load of damp bricks? Is your kiss firm? Fluttery? Lazy-daisy?

A French physician named Dr. Emile Malespine has invented le kissographe, a machine that weighs kisses like bonbons.

After experimenting with such lovely laboratory specimens as actresses Danielle Darrieux, Maria Montez and Blanchette Brunoy, he claims that the kiss is as great an index of character as handwriting. (The average American college freshman discovered the same thing a long time ago, without help from le kissographe, but science is science.)

For the sake of scientists everywhere, le kissographe consists of an ordinary letter-scale that measures lip pressures all the way from zero (your old schoolteacher) to one kilogram (over two pounds, or steady company). The scale is hooked up to a revolving smoked drum, which gives you a profile of every kiss.

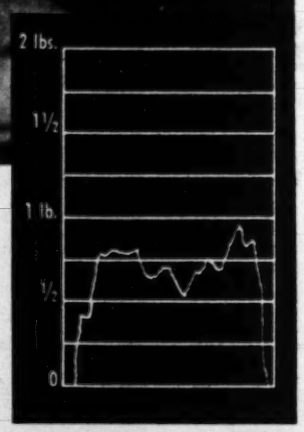
Two Pounds of Affection

After almost a year of research at his laboratory in Vitry, where he is an official of the Bureau of Health, Dr. Malespine has concluded that a good, run-of-the-mill kiss weighs about two pounds and makes a mark on the smoked drum like a line drawing of Mt. Everest. Anything under 500 grams (about one pound) indicates a lukewarm, or at least finicky, character.

Not as foolish as it sounds (some French scientists now take it quite seriously), le kissographe was built to study the Weber-Fechner Law of Sensation as it applies to the lips, among the most sensitive parts of the body. It can conceivably be used to compare personalities. Only hitch: is kissing a letter-scale really kissing? Dr. Malespine won't say.

DANIELLE DARRIEUX: BRRRRRRR!

GRAPH of former top French screen star, once suspected of Nazi collaboration, showed surprisingly low-power kiss weighing only one pound, indicating either suspicious nature or an innate dislike of kissing postal-scales. "Under par," says Dr. Malespine. "The rapidity and up-and-down indicates she does not trust. The final upshoot means she have hit a tooth. She remains mystery."



MARIA MONTEZ: "MAGNIFIQUE!"

"FROM ZERO to one pound quickly, alors! Then zut, three quartaire pound! Zit, zut, zit, zit, zit, zit! Not quite the two pounds, but observe the curve! A veritable marvel! Such a sustaining!" Montez kiss sent inventor Malespine into scientific rapture. "So prudent, so careful to make her dynamism evident little by little!" he rhapsodized. "So violent! So generous! So magnifique!!!!!!"

Kid Bowlers

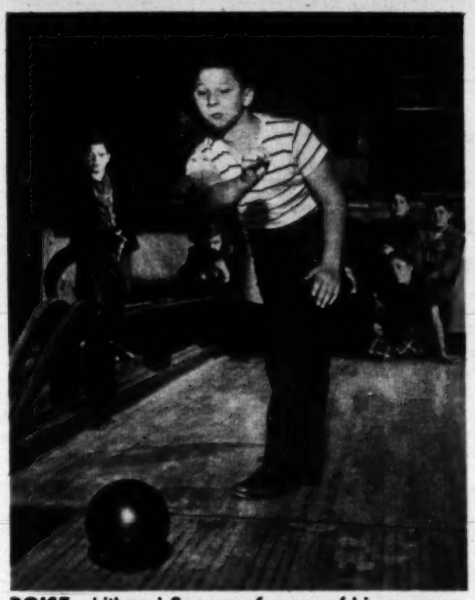
20,000 of them are aiming for the headpin

THE DAY WAS when parents and teachers took an exceedingly dim view of the bowling alley. Ten years ago this particular pleasure dome was often associated in the public mind with the corner saloon, the pool hall, the girlie show and other centers of sin.

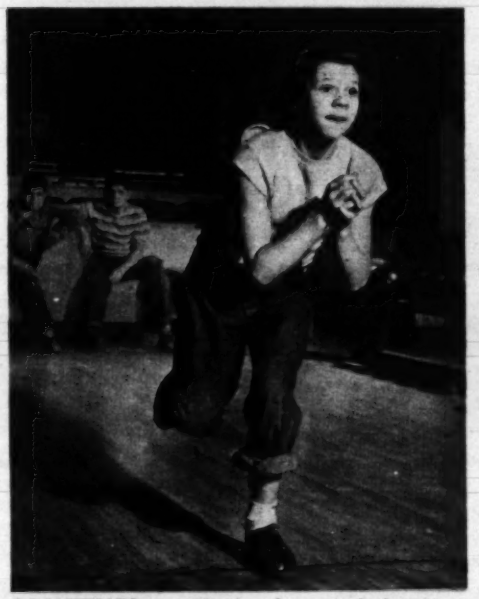
At present, however, the atmosphere of the bowling alley is frequently looked upon in both home and school as being on a par with the church gymnasium. Last year 10,000 young Americans – ranging in years from eight to 16–were accredited members of the nation's Junior Bowling Congress and another 10,000, although unaffiliated, were bowling at least once a week in almost every state in the land.

At Joe Falcaro's in Cedarhurst, L. I., school-sponsored bowling competitions are held daily. There youngsters from schools in a 10-mile radius spend their time slamming the ball down the alleys and – as Falcaro expresses it–"keeping strictly out of trouble."

Many school authorities are inclined to share Joe Falcaro's view that bowling helps prevent youthful delinquency. "It's better than football," said one of them recently. "It's just as much fun for the kids–it's much easier on us teachers."



POISE, skill and finesse of some of his younger customers has impressed alley-owner Falcaro.



SOMETIMES an attitude of prayer helps. Most youngsters use kid-sized bowling equipment.

At Joe Falcaro's Cedarhurst, L. I., alleys, more than 700 children get a school-sponsored weekly bowling workout.

YOU'LL BE HEARING more about Priscoline, a good medicine for frostbite, and for nerve and circulatory troubles. Today, it is our . . .

Newest Miracle Drug

By LAWRENCE GALTON

THOUSANDS OF PEOPLE with blood vessel disorders who might otherwise be disabled, even invalided, will be grateful for a little known, new drug called "Priscoline."

These people include victims of trench foot, frostbite and threatening gangrene due to diabetes. Among them, too, are victims of Buerger's and Raynaud's diseases, and others who are tortured when they walk, who suffer burning pain in the extremities and have varied difficulties due to poor circulation of the blood in arms and legs.

For many of them, Priscoline promises effective and even dramatic help.

Priscoline is a trade name for a drug which has been getting increasing attention in medical publications. Two reports on it have been published within the past year in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Not long ago, a 54-year-old man who, after frostbite, had suffered for five months with a cold, painful and ulcerated finger got the drug four times a day. One week later, pain was gone, temperature of the digit was virtually back to normal, and the ulcer had almost completely vanished.

A Case History

A young veteran, who had picked up trench foot in Europe in 1944 and had been in and out of hospitals ever since with pain, chilling and swelling of both feet was given Priscoline tablets several times daily for three weeks. During this period, he had no pain or swelling. On discontinuing treatment, he reported to a national guard camp. Despite a two-week tour of duty, he had no further symptoms.

Because it gets to the heart of the trouble, Priscoline has provided similar dramatic relief in other circulation difficulties.

Blood vessel disorders are still somewhat cloaked in mystery. But doctors do know that there are two groups of causes. On the one hand, a bacterial infection, something wrong with hormone secretion, or even an allergy, may produce definite lesions in the walls of blood vessels and other changes that interfere with blood flow.

But, on the other hand, chemicals like lead and arsenic, physical factors like cold and immersion in water, as well as injury to nerves and emotional troubles may affect circulation in another way. They provoke spasm, or sudden, abnormal, involuntary contractions of the vessel walls. And the contractions interfere with the coursing of the blood, producing cold extremities, ulcers and in some cases even gangrene.

An End to Spasms

Actually, current medical opinion holds that in all diseases of blood vessels, except in the latest stages, both organic change and spasm are present. In fact, either element, if it persists long enough, may cause the other to come into play.

That's why, frequently, the crucial factor that decides the outcome is relief of the spasm. If contractions can be stopped so that circulation to the affected arm or leg is increased, then irreparable damage such as gangrene may be avoided.

And right here is where Priscoline comes in.

While, in the past, spasm has been relieved by anesthetizing or surgically removing the nerves involved, such measures have not been feasible for all patients. What was wanted was a drug to do the job much more simply and practically. Of all those tested to date, Priscoline has emerged as the one which comes closest to the ideal. It can be given orally as well as by injection and thus can be used any time and place. And it's an effective spasm-relieving agent.

Consider Buerger's Disease—a condition which occurs chiefly in young men and leads to deficiency of blood, usually in the legs. Eventually, as the disease progresses, blood vessels may be completely obliterated, ulcers and gangrene may occur and the affected foot or leg may ultimately have to be amputated.

Helped Gangrene

One doctor has reported on 15 cases, 12 of whom already had early gangrene. After Priscoline therapy, there was marked improvement in all and proposed surgery could be deferred in a number of the cases.

The drug has relieved pain in the extremities in many diabetics and, by increasing circulation, has prevented or helped cure infection to which diabetics are particularly prone. One elderly diabetic woman whose circulation was badly impaired had severe pain in the right leg, the lower third of which was blue. Priscoline promptly relieved the pain, returned the skin to normal color, and permitted her to walk again.

Raynaud's Disease generally occurs in young people whose blood vessels to hands and feet go into spasm when exposed to slight cooling or to emotional upsets. Their fingers and toes and, occasionally, their ears and noses become white, numb and cold. Then, as the spasm is released, the normal color gradually returns.

If this spasm occurs too often or persists too long, ulcers may form on fingers and toes, and, especially in severe cases, gangrene may develop. Successful management of Raynaud's Disease by use of Priscoline has been reported frequently in recent months by the medical profession.

FROSTBITE, which sometimes mars winter sports, holds fewer dangers since the development of Priscoline, a new drug now used in treatment of a variety of ailments of the circulatory system.

Recently, in the medical journal Geriatrics one doctor told of using Priscoline on 15 elderly people who had what doctors call "arteriosclerotic peripheral vascular disease." This is a trouble common in people over 45. They have generalized hardening of the arteries. But they complain in particular of pain and aching in the calves of the legs when they walk, of night cramps or "restless legs," of "cold feet" which frequently become bluish during cold weather, and of tingling, numbness and burning of the feet.

"The circulation in my legs is bad, Doc," victims usually say. And they're right.

It Relieves Nerve Injury

"In the past," the Geriatrics report points out, "these patients would necessarily have had to gradually decrease their activity as their disease progressed. Their future would have been to 'just warm the bench' in order to prevent pain, ulcers and eventual gangrene. By means of Priscoline, they have been able to increase the circulation in their extremities, thereby allowing a much more active existence. . . . The drug is not a panacea for all arteriosclerotic (hardening of the arteries) patients, but it is a ray of hope for many."

Priscoline has proved of value, too, in causalgia, a name given to the constant and usually burning pain which may follow an injury to a nerve.

A typical causalgia victim was the 25-year-old veteran who, after a jeep wreck, had a constant dull, aching, pain in arm and shoulder. Sometimes the pain would become acute and there would be tingling, numbness and burning of index and middle fingers of one hand. Physical therapy proved no help. But Priscoline immediately abolished the symptoms. It was continued for a week, then the pain stopped.

Other Uses, Too

Many other applications of the drug are still in the experimental stage. Its effect on cases with chronic arterial hypertension (high blood pressure) is being studied. It seems to offer promise in treating thrombophlebitis, a condition in which a vein is partially or completely blocked off by a blood clot and which sometimes occurs after surgery or childbirth.

And it has helped, too, in the mysterious case of a 35-year-old woman with pain in throat, gums and teeth for 18 months who had been seen by a number of nose and throat specialists and dentists without relief. She was in excellent physical condition and no localized cause for her trouble could be found. Priscoline was tried and, as long as she took it, she had no pain.

While Priscoline is a powerful drug, it has low toxicity. Usually, at beginning of treatment, it produced gooseflesh, flushing and a feeling of warmth but these side reactions decrease as the drug is continued. In a few instances, there are also nausea, chilliness and tingling.

The drug is available only on prescription and, in all cases, should be used only under a doctor's supervision.

A great deal is still to be learned about blood vessel disorders which bother many thousands, young and old. The final key has not yet been discovered.

But the advent of Priscoline is important in itself for the relief it offers for many victims and also because it may lead to the eventual discovery of other drugs that may do even a better job.

Block Islanders and their Doc were introduced to PARADE readers last September.

A SEQUEL

The Doc Stays

Block Islanders keep their doctor . . .

WHEN Dr. Lorenzo Orlando decided to hang out his shingle on tiny Block Island last winter (PARADE, Sept. 4, 1949), the island's 800 year-round residents breathed easier. Old Doc Perry, their physician for 59 years, had died. Islanders knew how difficult it was for some small communities to attract doctors, even on the mainland. And until he came, the nearest physician was 12 miles away on the Rhode Island shore.

Aware that their 800 was well below the American Medical Association's 1500 to 1 ratio for doctors and patients, Block Islanders talked enthusiastically about building their island's first hospital for Dr. Orlando, and the Town Council voted $4,000 for new medical equipment.

Everybody was pleased. "I've never felt so satisfied," Dr. Orlando told PARADE in September. "There's a job to be done here, and I'm tackling it. It's the best decision I ever made." He was right about the job: from dawn to midnight, the island's new "Doc" eased hooks from snagged fishermen, set broken legs, treated colds, and delivered the island's babies.

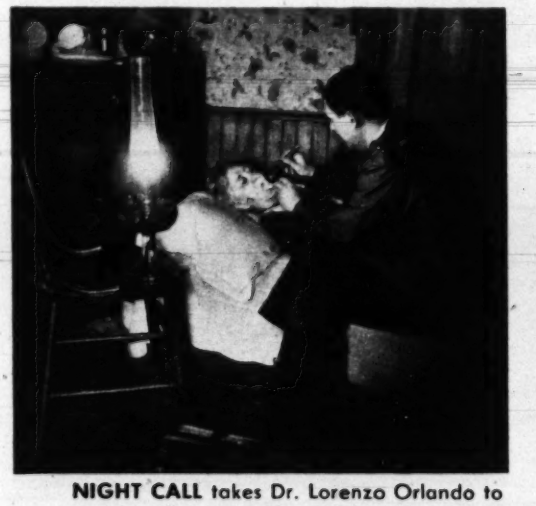
But by last month, hard-working Dr. Orlando began to have doubts. No hospital had been started, and money for new equipment was unspent. And the doctor was having trouble making ends meet. "I have a wife and two children," he told his neighbors, "and I pay $100 a month for rent. That's $1,200 for rent, and I've grossed only $3,500 all year long." Unless things improved, Dr. Orlando regretfully announced, he would have to leave.

Then Block Island roused itself. Two hundred rallied one night in the Odd Fellows Hall, summoned the Town Council to meet with them.

Block Island Shows Its Colors

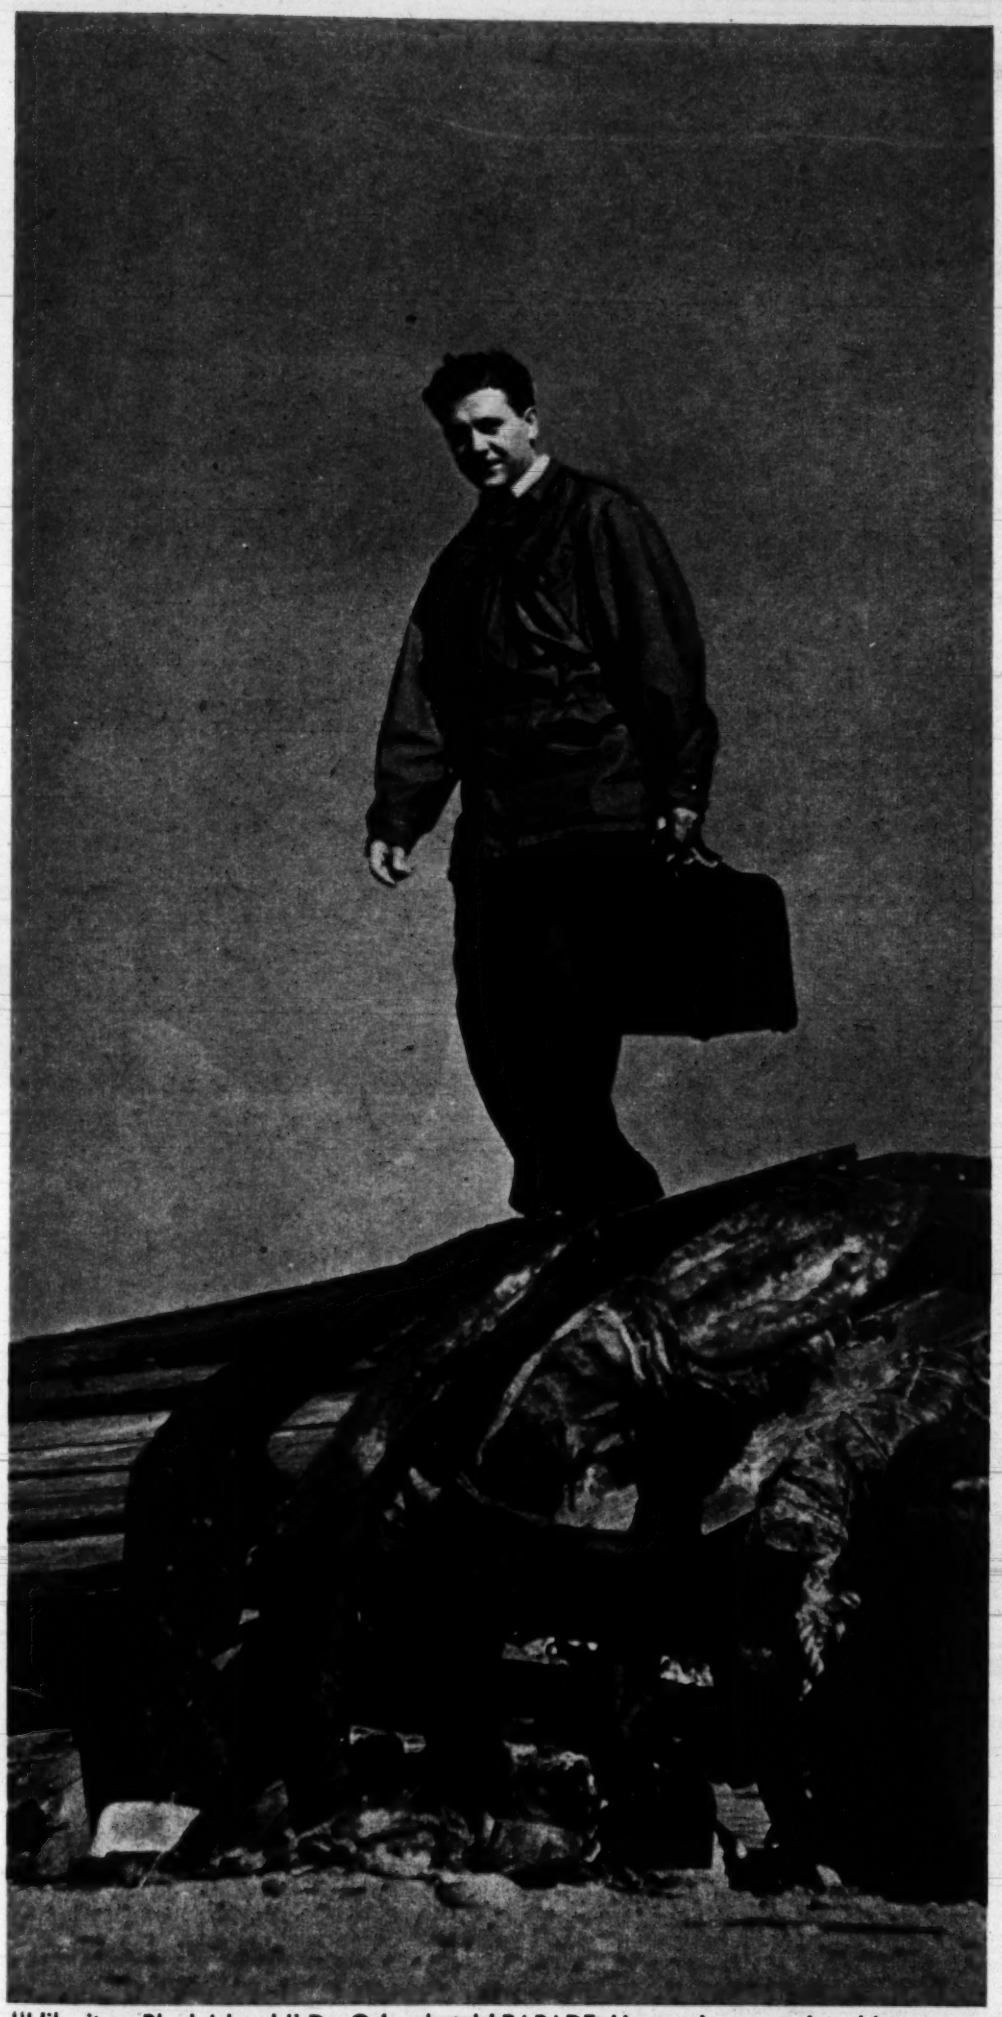
Three hours later, Block Island's people had shown what they thought of their new doctor. First, they told him to go right out and buy the $4,000 worth of new equipment. "You'll get action on the hospital," they promised. Among themselves, they agreed to "work out something" on Dr. Orlando's rent. That was all Dr. Orlando wanted to hear. "I'll stay," he said.

To Block Island, the meaning of the incident was clear: you can't expect a doctor to live on gratitude. Mainlanders, who have seen similar problems arise in many parts of the U.S., agreed with their diagnosis—and prescription.



NIGHT CALL takes Dr. Lorenzo Orlando to bedside illuminated by old kerosene lamp.

DR. ORLANDO tells story to townspeople, who agreed to build hospital, buy supplies.



"I like it on Block Island," Dr. Orlando told PARADE. He was happy to be able to stay.

SAVED: A Great Picture

IN A BOSTON STUDIO not long ago, Dick Tucker, one of America's foremost ballet photographers, watched fire destroy $3,000 worth of cameras and thousands of his finest negatives.

Among them was the one from which the picture above was made. His favorite, it had made him famous. He valued it at $10,000.

Tucker, photographing his daughter, plugged a lamp cord into a faulty socket. Film ignited; in a moment the studio was afire.

Burned and hurt—and worried about his most precious ballet negative – Tucker fled down the fire escape with his daughter.

Then suddenly he remembered: the negative was gone, but the large original print of the ballet dancers remained – safe in his theatrical collection in Harvard University's Widener Library.

THE ORIGINAL BAUME ANALGESIQUE

BATTLE of the bus: New York Fifth Ave. doubledecker takes on fares.

"CAN you change a twenty?" asks genial lady shopper. Bus driver groans, says he can't.

NICE old lady tries to put half-dollar in driver's hand as he dodges a taxi.

"...But Lady, I can't change a twenty!"

DRIVER Mike O'Donohue has sense of humor.

The battle of the bus lines is AMONG THE GREAT unsung sports Americans can witness for practically nothing, one of the greatest is the daily battle between the bus-drivers (who have one of the toughest jobs in the world) and their customers.

You can buy your ticket at any bus-stop in any city, but to catch the battle at its merriest, PARADE sent a photographer to ride one of New York City's famous Fifth Avenue double-deckers.

A bus driver is expected to be simultaneously a careful pilot, money-changer, city guide, mind-reader and gentleman. What he is up against is evident in these photographs.

What dark thoughts went on in the driver's mind (most Fifth Avenue drivers are pious, fiery Irishmen) are unprintable.

Already complicated enough, the job got worse a few years ago when the fares went from a simple dime to a dime and a penny. Now it's worse. The fare is 12¢ and LOST LADY stops bus, explains she doesn't want to ride, but asks way to a remote point in Flatbush. Driver tells her to take the subway.

MAN asks sternly why previous bus didn't stop on signal. Driver shrugs.

SCHOOLGIRLS fumble through pockets for money, lose it on floor while removing gloves.

the same everywhere

the pennies drive drivers wild.

The familiar, "What are you doing, trying to get rich?" (heard in all cities that have raised fares) leaves a driver limp and speechless.

Anything Can Happen

Passengers fumbling for pennies, dropping them on the floor, or trying to stuff them into the slot meant for dimes, have tossed drivers into near-apoplexy.

Threats to write in to the company for not stopping, for not speeding, or for not changing large bills, sends drivers berserk.

Under the pressure, New York drivers have cracked to the point of rising in wrath to shout down the throats of nice old ladies asking the way to the Aquarium (long since torn down). It happens everywhere.

According to reports, only one driver ever won the battle. He was one who stopped the bus, took his coat, and quit right on the spot.

"WHY didn't you stop when I rang?" demands irate lady. Bus halts at alternate blocks.

THE CASE OF THE

1 Negligent Nymph

The Very Latest PERRY MASON Adventure!

HERE'S a BRAND-NEW Perry Mason mystery—and it's a corker! One night, before Perry Mason's startled eyes, a beautiful girl jumps out of a window and starts swimming like mad—with a vicious dog chasing her. Perry realizes she is risking her neck to escape from millionaire George Alder's estate. When he hauls her into his boat, she hands him a bottle containing a letter. It names her heir to the Alder fortune—and accuses Alder of MURDER!

"He knows I've got the letter," she says. "He'll do ANYTHING to get it back. You've got to stop him!" But someone ELSE has the same idea and beats Mason to it—by putting a bullet through Alder's neck!

THE CASE OF THE

2 Dangerous Dowager

Murder Boards a Gambling Ship!

THE white-haired old lady looked as tough as steel. "Mr. Mason," she said puffing on a big cigar, "my grand-daughter has been gambling heavily. She's up to her neck in debt. I want you to get her I.O.U.'s back—and I don't care how you do it!"

When Mason boards the gambling ship, he bumps into the grand-daughter right outside the owner's private office. Then he looks inside—and finds a CORPSE!

A witness swears that he saw a woman throw a gun overboard right after the fatal shot was fired. "Can you identify the woman?" asks Perry Mason. "Certainly," the witness answers. Then points an accusing finger—at the white-haired old lady!

THE CASE OF THE

3 Lucky Legs

Blondes, Blackmail, and Brutal Murder!

PERRY MASON'S keen eyes saw the girl as she came out of the apartment. She seemed scared to death. Suddenly he remembered that she was the girl in that picture—"the girl with the lucky legs." A few minutes later he walked into that very same apartment and found the body of a man—BRUTALLY STABBED TO DEATH! Then he finds blood-stains on the girl's shoes!

So what does Mason do? He hides the evidence AND the girl! But he makes ONE little mistake—and the police arrest MASON himself for the murder! Calmly, Perry starts to dictate a confession to the astounded D. A. Then—without warning—the brilliant detective-lawyer springs his trap!

NOW! PROOF that brushing teeth right after eating with

COLGATE DENTAL CREAM HELPS STOP TOOTH DECAY!

Exhaustive Research by Eminent Dental Authorities Proves How Using Colgate Dental Cream Helps Stop Tooth Decay Before It Starts!

NOW! Dental science offers proof that brushing teeth with Colgate Dental Cream right after eating is an effective, safe way to help prevent new cavities, greatly reduce tooth decay!

More than 2 years' continuous research at leading universities—hundreds of case histories—makes this the most conclusive proof in all dentifrice research on tooth decay!

For now—the same toothpaste you use to clean your breath while you clean your teeth—brings you a proved way to reduce tooth decay! Colgate Dental Cream has been proved to contain all the necessary ingredients—including an exclusive patented ingredient—for effective daily dental care. No risk of irritation to tissues and gums! And no change in Colgate's famous flavor, foam, or cleansing action! The Colgate Dental Cream now at your dealer's is the same formula used in these exhaustive tests.

Regular visits to your dentist are necessary for complete dental care. No home method can help everyone; nor can it stop all tooth decay or help cavities already started.

NO OTHER DENTIFRICE OFFERS PROOF OF THESE RESULTS

X-Rays Show How Proper Use Of Colgate's Helps Stop Tooth Decay!

Under the direction of eminent dental authorities, one group of college men and women always brushed their teeth with Colgate Dental Cream right after eating—while another group followed their usual dental care. The average of the group using Colgate's as directed, and using Colgate's exclusively, was a startling reduction in number of cavities—far less tooth decay! The other group developed new cavities at a much higher rate.

Modern research shows that tooth decay is caused by mouth acids which are at their worst right after eating. When you brush your teeth with Colgate's as directed, you help remove mouth acids before they can harm enamel. And Colgate's penetrating foam reaches crevices in teeth where food particles often lodge.

TERENCE! IF THIS IS A DEAL THE DRAGON LADY IS OFFERING, LET US VIEW IT FROM THE ANGLE OF WHAT HAPPENED ON OTHER D. L. SHUFFLES.

O.K., D.L., YOU BOUGHT THE MOGUL BEY'S CONVERTED B-17 FROM HIM BY PHONE. NOW YOU'RE FIXING IT UP FOR USE IN YOUR PRISONER-RESCUE UNDERGROUND.

CHARLES, YOUR SUSPICIONS ARE STUPID... PUTTING MY CLIENTS ABOARD A PUBLIC AIRLINER, AS WE DID MR. AND MRS. GILBERT, EXPOSES THEM TO POSSIBLE INTERCEPTION BY OPPOSITION AGENTS.

WITH THIS LONG-RANGE PLANE I SHALL BE ABLE TO GUARANTEE DELIVERY OF MY CLIENTS TO WIDELY SCATTERED CITIES WITHOUT HINDRANCE... REMOVAL OF THE BAROQUE FURNITURE WILL MAKE SPACE FOR AUXILIARY GAS TANKS TO LENGTHEN THE SHIP'S RANGE...

AND THIS INSIGNIA OF MY UNDERGROUND, A BROKEN CHAIN, WILL ENABLE MY AGENTS TO RECOGNIZE THE SHIP WHEREVER IT IS SENT.

OF COURSE, WHEN I BOUGHT THE SHIP, I ASSUMED THAT YOU GENTLEMEN WOULD CONTINUE TO PILOT IT.

AH, HAH! CAREFUL, TERRY— HERE'S WHERE SHE COMES TO THE SNEAKY PART.

I GUESS WE COULD GET OTHER JOBS. LOTS OF NEED FOR PILOTS OUT HERE.

SANE-TYPE JOBS, TOO ...NO MORE WRESTLING OVERLOADED CRATES IN AND OUT OF MAKE-SHIFT AIRSTRIPS.

NO MORE CLOUD-DODGING BECAUSE THE LOCAL AIR FORCE SHOOTS FIRST AND LOOKS UP YOUR CREDENTIALS LATER.

AND NO MORE HIDING ON THE GROUND WITH THE FEELING THAT EVERY SHADOW'S OVERCROWDED WITH JOKERS WHO ARE PEEVED WITH US...
